Land Acknowledgement and Recognition

Before we can talk about sociology, power, inequality, we, the American Sociological Association (ASA), acknowledge that academic institutions, indeed the nation-state itself, was founded upon and continues to enact exclusions and erasures of Indigenous Peoples. This acknowledgement demonstrates a commitment to beginning the process of working to dismantle ongoing legacies of settler colonialism, and to recognize the hundreds of Indigenous Nations who continue to resist, live, and uphold their sacred relations across their lands. We also pay our respect to Indigenous elders past, present, and future and to those who have stewarded this land throughout the generations

Aldon D. Morris

ASA President

Northwestern University

I am thrilled to welcome you to the August 2021 ASA virtual meeting. It has been a difficult and challenging year. As your president, it was highly disappointing to have to move to a virtual event rather than an in-person meeting in Chicago, my hometown. I envisioned a great meeting in Chicago where the cultural and political doors flung open for sociologists to walk through, enjoy, and flex their sociological imaginations inspired by a great city as we interrogated the state of affairs of humans globally and historically.

The COVID -19 pandemic would not cooperate to make such a meeting possible. When we recognized we had to have a virtual meeting, ASA staff, the Council, session organizers, and the 2021 Program (Rhacel Salazar Parreñas, Nancy López, Joyce Bell, Hae Yeon Choo, Nicole Gonzalez Van Cleve, Jeff Goodwin, Tod Hamilton, Mignon Moore, Pamela Oliver, Brittany Slatton, Earl Wright) and local Chicago (Andrew Papachristos, Joyce Bell, Savina Balasubramanian, Heather Dalmage, Tiffany Davis, Amanda Lewis, Tracey Lewis-Elligan, Cynthia Manns, Mary Pattillo, Michael Rodríguez-Muñiz, Quincy Thomas Stewart, Vilna Bashi Treitler, Celeste Watkins-Hayes) committees sprang into action to organize an exceptional virtual meeting. I deeply thank them for their commitments and efforts to persevere and triumph despite the challenges. The driving spirit behind these efforts asked whether we could use the pandemic as a pivotal moment of opportunity to do special things to produce a great meeting unimaginable by an in-person meeting. We embraced the idea that sociologists are immensely creative and cherish unique challenges.

Our 2021 theme—Emancipatory Sociology: Rising to the Du Boisian Challenge—fits perfectly with innovations required to launch a virtual meeting. The planners of the 2021 meeting have organized exciting panels, virtual gatherings and celebrations, and numerous fora to explore the social world through sociological theories, debates, and methodologies. The burning issues of the day, including inequalities associated with race, gender, class, sexual orientations, and health disparities will be highlighted and explored. Troubling issues regarding climate and environmental challenges will be examined. The nature and promise of sociology will be examined, paying attention to the discipline's history, present, and future. In this respect, we have riveted attention on the international nature of sociology, especially regarding the global south, settler colonization, and decolonializing the discipline. Special efforts have been made to make this meeting exceptionally diverse and inclusive.

I welcome the participation of our membership as well as our special interdisciplinary guests to the 2021 ASA meeting. Let's walk through these virtual doors and get down to sociological business analyzing our troubled world. But as we walk through these doors, let's remember to have fun, meet new colleagues, and celebrate the lives of colleagues no longer with us. Welcome!

The Sociological curriculum has been western centered since the beginning of the discipline. Its classical origins are rooted in Europe. Indeed, Auguste Comte, Karl Marx, Emile Durkheim, Max Weber and others, including Georg Simmel and Herbert Spencer are credited with providing sociology with its canonical statements that have guided the field. American sociologists, including those of the "Chicago School," are recognized as providing the canonical thought for contemporary sociology. However, scholars throughout the global south have begun to challenge the “universality” of the western based curriculum. They argue the western curriculum do not explain the realities of victims of slavery, colonialism, settler Colonialism, empire and racism. These scholars insist that a narrow curriculum prevents the understandings of people worldwide, including the West. This panel will explore these issues associated with the curriculum, including efforts to initiate change

Recently James House published, "The Culminating Crisis of American Sociology and Its Role in Social Science and Public Policy: An Autobiographical, Multimethod, Reflexive Perspective in the Annual Review of Sociology. This piece argued that contemporary sociology, unlike in earlier periods, is experiencing a theoretical and methodological crisis. Yet, critics argue that contemporary sociology is experiencing a theoretical and methodological rebirth and innovation. This panel will examine the state of sociology to assess its current status and future prospects.

Sociology programs exist in colleges and universities throughout the world. Yet, the United States and western countries serve as the face of sociology and receive the lion share of attention. However, it is important sociologists learn how sociology is practiced in the global south and the major challenges sociology confront in these regions. The purpose of this session is to provide knowledge of sociology in the global south.

As noted in the senior panel on this topic, Recently James House published, "The Culminating Crisis of American Sociology and Its Role in Social Science and Public Policy: An Autobiographical, Multimethod, Reflexive Perspective in the Annual Review of Sociology. This piece argued that contemporary sociology, unlike in earlier periods, is experiencing a theoretical and methodological crisis. Yet, critics argue that contemporary sociology is experiencing a theoretical and methodological rebirth and innovation. This panel will examine the state of sociology to assess its current status and prospects. This panel will address the same issues but from the perspective of junior and mid-career sociologists.

Discussant: Michael Schwartz, Stony Brook University
Over the last decade, sociology has witnessed the rise of Du Boisian sociology. This sociology draws on the large body of scholarship developed by W. E. B. Du Bois and his colleagues. This sociological tradition addresses race and modernity in novel ways that have not been absorbed into mainstream sociology. This erasure is slowly being corrected. Yet, it is unclear what the future of Du Boisian scholarship is likely to be. This panel will discuss what Du Boisian scholarship has already accomplished and what it is capable of accomplishing in sociology and the social sciences in the future.

Discussants: Andrew V. Papachristos, Northwestern University; Ruby Mendenhall, University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign

Gun violence in Chicago, as in most American cities, remains stubbornly concentrated in a small number of neighborhoods that have been surveilled, locked up, and otherwise left out of economic, political, social, and educational investments. This session brings to life one meaning of emancipatory sociology by diving into these contexts of oppression and neighborhood violence. Panelists will offer their reflections and experiences on gun violence and gun violence prevention in Chicago, drawing on their experiences as drawing on their experiences as public officials, violence preventionists, social scientists, and those living in communities most impacted by gun violence. The discussion aims to serve as a bridge between emancipatory practices and policies that can provide healing to communities experiencing gun violence. The session will conclude with a celebration of those efforts that rises to the DuBoisian challenge.
