Increase your earning potential. Teach in business.

If you have an earned doctorate and demonstrated research potential, new opportunities are on the horizon. In response to business doctoral faculty shortages, Bridge to Business programs qualify non-business doctorates for high-paying tenure track positions at business schools. Not only will you gain a competitive advantage in the job market, you will work in a multidisciplinary, diverse research environment while developing future leaders. Post-doctoral Bridge to Business programs vary in length and delivery methods—visit online to compare and find one best for you. Information available at booth #117.

Among new assistant professors, those in business had the highest salary.

Sessions

2. Opening Plenary Session. How Communities Matter: Perspectives of Artists, Academics and Activists

Hilton San Francisco, Continental Ballroom 4-6, Ballroom Level

Session Organizer and Presider: Patricia Hill Collins, University of Maryland-College Park

Panel: Amina Mama, University of Cape Town, South Africa

Marcyliena Morgan, Harvard University

Tam Tran, Brown University

Nancy Lopez, University of New Mexico

Charlotte Bunch, Rutgers University

Reverend Donald Guest, Glide Memorial United Methodist Church

This opening plenary session invites a distinguished and diverse panel of people who have worked in behalf of social justice to discuss the needs of contemporary and future communities, with a special focus on youth. We have invited artists, academics and/or activists who are involved in building local, regional, national or global communities that affect youth. Some are focused on building learning communities for students, while others are students. Some study and use art, music and film to educate and inspire youth, while others craft excellent scholarship that examines youth cultural production. Some work directly with communities who strive to tackle social inequalities of race, gender, poverty, ethnicity and immigration status. Because our panelists are so different from one another, we envision a lively and substantive dialogue as panelists consider the connections between social justice and building excellent, diverse and just communities.

3. Thematic Session. Imagined Communities in the 21st Century

Session Organizer and Presider: Edward A. Tiryakian, Duke University

Panel: Craig Calhoun, Social Science Research Council
Gary Alan Fine, Northwestern University

Evelyn Nakano Glenn, University of California-Berkeley

Barry Wellman, University of Toronto

Discussant: Eduardo Bonilla-Silva, Duke University

A quarter of a century after its publication, Benedict Anderson's Imagined Communities has become a standard reference in contemporary thinking of nationalism and nationhood having a modern, peripheral base in the collective imaginary and in new modes of communication. This session brings together leading scholars to evaluate and assess the durability of "imagined communities" as a heuristic notion for comparative analysis in the 21st Century. Topics to be discussed by presenters will include contemporary nationalisms, race, gender and ethnic studies, symbolic interactionism, and virtual and internet communities. The session will be the occasion for a renewed look at two key aspects of modernity: "nation" and "community".

4. Thematic Session. Impacts of Changing Demography on Community

Hilton San Francisco, Franciscan A, Ballroom Level

Session Organizer and Presider: Stewart E. Tolnay, University of Washington

Black Like Who? The Changing Face of Black America. Camille Zubrinsky Charles, University of Pennsylvania

Immigration and Native Mobility: Implications for Community Change and Emerging Patterns of Segregation. Kyle Crowder, University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill; Matthew S. Hall, Pennsylvania State University

Racial Segregation and the Spatial Concentration of Poverty. Lincoln G. Quillian, Northwestern University

How Neighborhoods Matter for Immigrant Children: The Formation of Educational Resources in Chinatown, Koreatown, and Pico Union, Los Angeles. Min Zhou, University of California-Los Angeles

Discussant: Reynolds Farley, University of Michigan-Ann Arbor

Sociologists have devoted much effort to documenting and interpreting the changing composition of the American population. Racial and ethnic heterogeneity in the United States during the first decade of the twenty-first century rivals that of the early twentieth century. Immigration is the primary source of the increasing diversity of the American population, but differential fertility and mortality also contribute. More locally, migration streams and residential mobility patterns produce uneven concentrations of racial and ethnic groups within some states, cities, and neighborhoods. This session is devoted to improving our understanding of the many and varied ways in which changing demographic profiles have affected America's communities and their residents.

5. Thematic Session. Neo-Liberalism and the Assault on Community

Parc 55 Hotel, Cyril Magnin I, Level Three

Session Organizer and Presider: Rick Fantasia, Smith College

Panel: Chris Tilly, University of California-Los Angeles

Robert Perrucci, Purdue University

Kathleen C. Schwartzman, University of Arizona

For the past three decades a conservative revolution (or counterrevolution), often termed "Neo-liberalism", has swept across the capitalist (and socialist) world, touching everything in its path and leaving virtually no domain of social, cultural, or economic life unchanged. Its characteristics have varied across different national and political-economic contexts, but the proponents of neo-liberalism have generally pursued a fairly standard set of goals. These have generally included the thorough privatization of public, state services; the forceful promotion of trade liberalization and de-regulation of economies; the erosion of traditional collective structures (from labor movements, to political parties, to systems of electoral mobilization); the replacement of cooperative relations by brutal forms of competition; and, overall, the elevation of the market as the supreme arbiter of all human affairs. This panel will consider the effects of such transformations on communities, both spatial and social, in the U.S. and elsewhere.

6. Thematic Session. New Kinds of Coalitions: Labor and Community

Hilton San Francisco, Plaza A, Lobby Level

Session Organizer: Dan Clawson, University of Massachusetts-Amherst

Consumer Boycotts and Human Rights: A Global Perspective on Limitations for Union Coalitions. Gay W. Seidman, University of Wisconsin-Madison

Challenges to Building Labor-Community Coalitions. Stephanie A. Luce, University of Massachusetts

Overcoming the New City Trenches: Lessons from Anti-Wal-Mart Labor/Community Coalitions. Dorian T. Warren, Columbia University

Innovative California Issue-based Labor Coalitions. Paul R. Kumar, National Union of Healthcare Workers

Labor has increasingly come to recognize that it can succeed only in coalition with community groups, and that to address the concerns of its members unions must make community issues central. Included among the many forms this takes are living wage struggles, global consumer boycotts to enforce "human rights," and coalitions that take on political issues central to members' lives, such as fighting Wal-Mart's spread.

7. Thematic Session. War and the Politics of Communities in Iraq

Session Organizers: Clarence Y.H. Lo, University of Missouri-Columbia; Michael Schwartz, Stony Brook State University

Panel: Immanuel Wallerstein, Yale University

Pratap Chatterjee, Corp Watch

Michael Schwartz, Stony Brook State University

This session will consider the relationships between American Middle East policy and the rise of sectarian divisions in Iraq since the U.S. invasion. The panelists will consider both the role of U.S. military, economic and political policies in creating, channeling and constraining sectarian violence, and the ways in which the fluid conflict in Iraq has constrained and altered American efforts to establish U.S. hegemony in the Middle East.

8. Special Session. The Politics of Identity

Session Organizer: Nancy A. Naples, University of Connecticut

Presider: Stephen Valocchi, Trinity College

Politics of Identity: Strategies, Contradictions, and Contestations.

Mary Bernstein, University of Connecticut

Class, Identity, and Contemporary Black Women. Katrina Bell

McDonald, Johns Hopkins University

(Mis)Recognitions: Romanies, Sexualities, Sincerities. Ethel C. Brooks, Rutgers University

Discussant: Stephen Valocchi, Trinity College

The politics of identity includes debates within different fields of sociology about the role of identity in shaping constructions of community, organizational behavior, information technologies, and collective action as well as within other institutional sites. Census categories, social movement politics, and neighborhood formation are all informed by constructions of identity and the politics of who counts and who should be included. This panel will examine the politics of identity both within the field of sociology and in law, politics, social movements, and community. In the field of social movements, the shift from a narrow critique of identity politics to more sophisticated understandings of how identity functions to empower participants or to limit participation around who can or cannot be included in certain mobilizations as has been evident in the LGBTQI movements in different historical moments. No longer viewed as naïve essentialism, the study of the strategic dimensions of identity and its link to materialist locations helps shed light on a variety of social change efforts and identity formation processes.

9. Regional Spotlight Session. New Politics of Race, Youth, and Community Justice

Session Organizers: Nikki Jones, University of California-Santa

Barbara; Geoff K. Ward, University of California

Presider: Geoff K. Ward, University of California

Panel: Nikki Jones, University of California-Santa Barbara

Victor M. Rios, University of California-Santa Barbara

Antwi A Akom, San Francisco State University

This session looks critically at the place of youth in the racial politics of community, and showcases the work of young academics and activists to advance new understandings and politics of race, youth and community justice, particularly in relation to criminal social control.

10. Didactic Seminar. Emergent Technologies for Qualitative Research

Hilton San Francisco, Franciscan B, Ballroom Level

Session Organizer and Leader: Sharlene J. Hesse-Biber, Boston College

Emergent technologies have pushed against the boundaries of qualitative research practice. This didactic workshop will explore issues regarding how qualitative researchers can effectively apply new technological innovations, including the use of the internet, mobile phone technologies, geospatial technologies, and the incorporation of computer-assisted software programs, to collect and analyze both qualitative and mixed-methods data. This workshop will: (1) Provide an overview of some of the newest mobile technologies (using GPS) in the service of gathering qualitative data. The mobile phone allows the researcher to capture personal experience in real time and space. The collection of user experience data has enormous implications for the study of human interaction. The researcher is able to study experience in context over an extended period of time using fewer resources and in a less obtrusive manner. We provide in-depth examples how this technology might be applied to a qualitative research project. We will also discuss some of the ethical, issues emergent technologies raise for social researchers. (2) Computer Assisted Software for Multi-media Analysis. We demonstrate the latest data gathering and analysis software for analyzing multi-mediated data qualitative data-web-based data, audio, video and images using the computer-assisted data analysis package, HyperResearch (www.researchware.com) (3) Transcription Software for Qualitative Data Analysis We will also demonstrate cutting edge transcription software and discuss how the importance of transcription and its role in analyzing your qualitative data. We will demonstrate the transcription software, HyperTranscribe (www.researchware.com). Please note: This is not a hands-on workshop, but we will be demonstrating the software and provide you with a set of handouts.

11. Departmental Workshop. Looking at Sociology from Across the Fence: What Makes a Good Department

Session Organizer and Leader: Scott G. McNall, California State University-Chico

This workshop will answer the question of why sociology departments, compared to other university departments, are often viewed negatively by higher-level administrators (deans, provosts, chancellors, and presidents). Workshop participants will be asked to assume the role of the "other" when it comes to ranking and evaluating departments. Suggestions will be provided as to how a department can generate administrative support and will identify those areas of the organization and curriculum that should be "owned" by sociology departments.

12. Research/Policy Workshop. National Institute of Drug Abuse - Funding and Data Opportunities

Hilton San Francisco, Van Ness, Sixth Floor

Session Organizer: Yonette F. Thomas, National Institutes of Health/National Institute on Drug Abuse

Leader: Augusto Diana, National Institutes of Health

This workshop will present funding and data opportunities available through the National Institute on Drug Abuse.

13. Teaching Workshop. Pedagogy in Practice and Producing Practicing Sociologists

Session Organizer: Nicole T. Carr, University of South Alabama

Leader: Jeffrey Will, University of North Florida; Laura Nichols, Santa Clara State University; Leslie Hossfeld University of North Carolina-Wilmington

As teachers of sociology, many of us have a great influence on solving social problems through educating our students. As our students gain the sociological perspective and integrate its practice in their personal and work activities, we can have an indirect positive impact on our communities. The goal of this regular session is to assemble presenters that will focus on approaches to teaching that promote critical thinking and evidence gathering- which are cornerstones of sociology in practice. Presenters will discuss either 1) specific assignments that facilitate active learning and require students to use sociological tools to answer a question or 2) pedagogical approaches to entire courses that engage students in using sociological approaches to study the world around them.

14. Teaching Workshop. Teaching on the Sociology of AIDS (co-sponsored with the Sociologists AIDS Network)

Hilton San Francisco, Union Square 15-16, Fourth Floor

Session Organizer: Carrie Elizabeth Foote, IUPUI

Co-Leaders: Bronwen Lichtenstein, University of Alabama-Jorge Fontdevila, California State University-Fullerton
Carrie Elizabeth Foote, IUPUI

In this teaching workshop, panelists will share ideas for teaching about HIV/AIDS across the undergraduate and graduate sociology curriculum. In addition to discussing approaches to designing entire courses on HIV/AIDS, the presenters will outline a number of exercises, in-class and outside activities, and research projects that can be used to help reinforce critical concepts and theories in introductory and advanced sociology courses. Panelists will also share their experiences in teaching about a controversial social problem.

Recent events on the world stage evoke a sense of "back to the future": new geopolitical imperial rivalries, a new scramble for Africa, and a new struggle for control of central Asia. And maybe world-system scholars seeking to understand these 21st century developments need to return to the late 19th/early 20th centuries to reconsider, or theorize anew, classical geopolitical dynamics and themes. Therefore, this session features papers dealing with the distinctly geopolitical processes or structures of the world-system.

34. Section on Sociology of Education PaperSession. Higher Education and Social Stratification*Parc 55 Hotel, Cyril Magnin III, Level Three

Session Organizer and Presider: Eric Grodsky, University of Minnesota

Switchings Under Uncertainty: The Coming and Becoming of Meanings. Harrison C. White, Columbia University

Discussant: Isaac A. Reed, University of Colorado-Boulder

Meaning construction has generally been conceptualized and analyzed from either micro or macro level perspectives. The papers in this session present theoretical frameworks that combined micro and macro approaches, and demonstrate that micro and macro level social action must be analyzed together to understand cultural formation.

37. Presidential Panel. A Defining Moment? Youth, Power and the Obama Phenomenon Hilton San Francisco, Plaza A, Lobby Level

Session Organizer: Patricia Hill Collins, University of Maryland-College Park

Presenter: Amanda Evelyn Lewis, Emory University

Panel: Gurminder K. Bhambra, University of Warwick

Douglas McAdam, Stanford University

Cathy J. Cohen, University of Chicago

At This Defining Moment: College Student Perspectives on Race, Gender, and the 2008 Presidential Election. Enid Lynette Logan, University of Minnesota-Minneapolis

Barack Obama's presidential campaign demonstrated innovative approaches to organizing new political communities, most notably youth. In essence, by encouraging youth from heterogeneous backgrounds to participate in something bigger than themselves, the campaign simultaneously politicized youth and helped construct a political community of youth. This session uses the construct of youth as an age cohort or "community" of people to investigate two questions: In what sense do youth bring a distinctive generational ethos to questions of power, change and democratic processes? In what sense have youth been empowered, changed and engaging in new forms of civic participation in response to the Obama phenomenon? The session examines several themes, among them (1) how global youth movements of the 1960s might speak to contemporary youth issues; (2) how youth were situated within the Obama administration's reliance on "blended social action"; (3) how the changing demographic and attitudinal contours of contemporary youth populations in the U.S., especially youth of color framed their views of political participation; and (4) the significance of youth participation in contemporary politics for Obama's messages of hope and change.

38. Thematic Session. Mass Imprisonment and Communities in the Post-Welfare State: Social Activists and Sociologists in Dialogue Parc 55 Hotel, Cyril Magnin I, Level Three

Session Organizer: Benjamin Fleury-Steiner, University of Delaware Panel: Cynthia Chandler, Justice Now

Rose Braz, Critical Resistance

Megan Lee Comfort, University of California-San Francisco

The Social Structure of Neighborhood Effects and Well-being. Robert J. Sampson, Harvard University

Discussant: David J. Harding, University of Michigan

The study of contextual effects on individual behavior has been reinvigorated in recent years with an increasing number of studies focused on understanding how the characteristics of neighborhoods shape a wide range of social behaviors. While increasingly rich data and more powerful methodological techniques have allowed for considerable advances in knowledge about these neighborhood effects, important substantive and theoretical questions remain. To what extent can the effects of neighborhood conditions be disentangled from the effects of individual- and family-level characteristics? What characteristics of community characteristics are most salient in shaping various social behaviors? What are the key mechanisms through which these effects operate? How well do our conceptions of "communities" correspond with actual patterns of social interaction and resource utilization? And, how can researchers more effectively assess the reciprocal relationships between neighborhood conditions and the activities of neighborhood residents? This session brings together social scientists grappling with these and related questions in studying neighborhood effects on diverse social outcomes.

Panel: Jessica L. Collett, University of Notre Dame

Mindy Stompler, Georgia State University

Debra Street, State University of New York-Buffalo

Steven Allen Butcher, University of California-Irvine

This workshop is intended for graduate students at all levels. Among other topics, we will discuss the socialization and professionalization process, time management (including strategies for single parents and balancing teaching and research), teaching as a graduate student, choosing topics and advisors, and grant writing and publishing. The workshop will be interactive, with many opportunities for questions and participation.

44. Research/ Policy Workshop. Forging the Future for Sociological Research: Building Infrastructure for Disciplinary, Interdisciplinary and Multi-disciplinary Research

Session Organizer: Patricia E. White, National Science Foundation

Leader: R. Saylor Breckenridge, Wake Forest University

Panel: Julia Lane, National Science Foundation

Jack Meszaros, National Science Foundation

Steven Ruggles, University of Minnesota-

Tom W. Smith, National Opinion Research Center

R. Saylor Breckenridge, Wake Forest University

Creating social science infrastructure to enable both disciplinary and interdisciplinary research is a major priority of the social and behavioral sciences at the National Science Foundation. In 2008, the Directorate for Social, Behavioral and Economic Sciences issued a call for submission of large-scale interdisciplinary projects that "advance the understanding of the dynamics of human systems;" and proposals to develop and enhance research infrastructure in these disciplines. In 2009, the Sociology Program renewed support for the General Social Survey and the International Integrated Public Micro-Data Series (IPUMS-International), large social science data resources. Presenters will talk about publicly available tools, instrumentation, shared databases and cyber-infrastructure for disciplinary, interdisciplinary, and multidisciplinary research; and how to secure funding for these types of projects and resources. The session is interactive; audience participation is encouraged.

45. Teaching Workshop. Sociology and Community-based Learning: Integrating Sociology into Internships, Service-Learning, and Practice Experiences

Session Organizer: Kathleen Lowney, Valdosta State University

Co-Leaders: Kathleen Lowney, Valdosta State University

Ginger E. Macheski, Valdosta State University

Brenda M. Kowalewski, Weber State University

With our discipline's turn toward public sociology/applied sociology, more faculty and degree programs are requiring sociology students to enter and engage with the community. This worthwhile educational goal may be met through internships, sociological practice, or service-learning assignments. Without a focus on the application of sociological knowledge, however, such requirements can too quickly devolve into simply credit hours for volunteering or "just showing up." Such community-college collaborations are lost opportunities for student learning. This workshop will offer ideas for how to infuse these educational opportunities with sociological knowledge, so that students both help their communities and see sociology in action.

The papers in this session consider the impact of family and kinship systems on child-youth development. Different domains of development are considered, including racial identity, independence, academic performance, emotional-behavioral development, and future marital roles. Families with diverse socio-economic statuses are represented, including low-income, middle-class, and affluent ones. Differences in family SES, race-ethnicity, and immigrant status, serve to differentiate the contexts in which children-teens develop. Both qualitative and quantitative approaches are used to address the relationship between family systems and child-youth developmental outcomes and processes. The diversity of family-kinship systems provide an opportunity to address and expand on normative theories of development.

A Short Durée: World System Analysis in View of Geopolitical and Economic Transformations in the Last 35 Years. Nitsan Chorev, Brown University

The publication of Wallerstein's first volume of The Modern World-System radically altered the way many sociologists conceived of national development and the fundamental principles of macrosociology more generally, and it ushered in a wave of theoretical and empirical studies framed within what became known as "world systems analysis." In the three decades since, many of the tenets of this approach have been incorporated into mainstream sociology, while other aspects have fallen by the wayside. The goal of this panel is to bring together both adherents and critics of this perspective in order to highlight the major contributions of world systems analysis, assess its current status in our discipline, and perhaps most importantly consider "where we go from here."

This session explores the sociological dimensions of HIV/AIDS with an emphasis on work that analyzes the pandemic's relationship to race, class, gender, and sexuality. US-based and international scholarship will draw parallels between macro-structures of inequality, institutions and policies, individual lived experiences, and the AIDS pandemic. Papers that analyze how multiple social group memberships—and the statuses that they confer—shape the cultural meanings, material relations, or policy and programmatic implications of the epidemic are of particular interest. San Francisco has played a unique role in the history, medical infrastructure, and political mobilization efforts around HIV, so it is fitting that this session take place at these meetings.

New Media and the Changing Politics of Race in the Obama Victory. Melissa V. Harris-Lacewell, Princeton University

The Civic Empowerment Theme in the Obama Campaign. Peter Levine, Tufts University

Barack Obama's election is often described as a "defining moment," one marking some sort of fundamental change for American democracy. But what exactly has changed, or might change, and why? This session explores how the election of Barack Obama catalyzes new thinking about the meaning of democracy and change in the United States. Our panelists examine some important factors associated with change, such as new forms of political engagement by youth, new immigrant populations, women, and similar populations; new ways of organizing democratic institutions themselves that reflect a changing, heterogeneous American population; as well as the seeming commitment to community service and similar values thought to be associated with the revitalization of democratic institutions. This session takes up broader questions of what this specific victory says about communities and change in contemporary American society. This plenary session serves two additional purposes. First, it links the general conference theme of The New Politics of Community to the specific issues of how the Obama presidency might signal a new politics of community on the national level. Second, it also introduces a series of complementary sessions that collectively comprise a min-symposium that collectively investigate the sociological significance of Barack Obama. This plenary session is designed to open up discussion by examining the actual and potential significance of Barack Obama's historic victory. Presidential Panels, thematic sessions, and other programmatic elements take a closer look at these issues.

Over sixty years after the signing of the 1948 Declaration of Human Rights, the vision of a global community that respects the humanity of all individuals remains elusive. Continental Africa, in particular, continues to confront economic, political and social issues that preoccupy human rights scholars and activists. Despite these challenges, women, ethnic groups, the poor and many disenfranchised groups across the continental Africa have used the mandate of human rights to advocate for changes in their respective communities, regions, ethnic groups and/or nations. Until recently, American sociology has remained largely on the sidelines of these developments, leaving human rights issues, especially in relation to Africa, to other well-established traditions. In the hopes of building on a growing interest by U.S. social scientists in global human rights initiatives, this Presidential Panel explores how an increased emphasis on human rights and Africa might inform American sociology.

73. Thematic Session. Racial Formation: Conflict and Coalition Building in Asian, Latino and African American Communities

Session Organizer: Leland T. Saito, University of Southern California

Panel: Darnell M. Hunt, University of California-Los Angeles

Edward Jang-Woo Park, Loyola Marymount University

Manuel Pastor, University of Southern California

Discussant: Michael Omi, University of California-Berkeley

In California, one of the major demographic shifts occurring is a change in some communities from a majority African American to increasing numbers of Latin American immigrants. Considering the rise in conflict and media attention given to Black/Brown relations in California communities undergoing this change, this is a timely and significant topic. What is usually missing in this analysis, however, is that Asian Americans are often major participants in the kinds of relations formed in these communities. This panel addresses racism, conflict, and coalition-building among the three groups in California communities.

Much of the work on sexual communities in the last three decades has focused on those marked as lesbian, gay, bisexual or queer. Social historians examine how communities developed as a result of industrialization, urbanization, and consumer capitalism. Related are recent studies that trace how specific features of what is understood as "modern" gay life are reflected in the growth of communities in other nations in what is described as global gay culture. Other studies have focused on the specifics of interaction within selected cities, or how differences - specifically of class and race - are played out within a specific locale. Not surprisingly, recent research has centered on the impact of the Internet on community creation and development; on the relationship of urban politics and gay neighborhoods, and on the social organization of sites centered on distinct erotic practice. But what community means is not always obvious. Often enough, what is meant by community is taken-for-granted; or community is conflated with neighborhood or with sexual subculture; or it is equated with the necessary fiction of political solidarity. This session would call into question what is meant by sexual community through a series of papers that seek to conceptually and empirically clarify its meaning or meanings, to showcase the conditions for its usage, to consider whether sexual deviance or transgression is necessary to the existence of sexual community or to demonstrate how communities operate.

Boaventura de Sousa Santos, University of Coimbra

Economic globalization is producing political globalization in the form of an emergent global civil society in which competing ideas about global governance are contested. An important aspect of this process is the rise of a new global left composed of local social movements, non-governmental organizations and non-elite individuals who are activists in both local and global politics. The World Social Forum process is the most visible aspect of this process. This panel examines the problems and issues involved in the effort to construct community and effective collective action on a global scale. How important is transnational solidarity for effective transnational collective action? Is global community a prerequisite for democracy at the global level? How can knowledge of earlier world revolutions suggest ways for understanding what is going on now?

Scholars in the sociology of music, youth, and popular culture have been studying how young people across race, ethnicity, gender and social class interact in diverse ways to create "communities" around musical genres. With today's technological advances, the interplay between music's virtual spaces and its physical locations promises many insights into social practices, interaction, cultural work, identity, and resistance.

82. Professional Workshop. Teaching for Social Justice and Social Change: Connecting to Movement Building in the 21st Century

Session Organizer: Walda Katz-Fishman, Howard University

Co-Leaders: Walda Katz-Fishman, Howard University; Rose Brewer, University of Minnesota

The context of this interactive workshop is today's historic moment of deepening social, economic, political, and ecological crises, and renewed activism and social movements as a framework for discussion about the critical classroom, US and global society and community, and social transformation. This educational and transformative project involves the unity of theory and practice (praxis), i.e., liberatory scholarship and pedagogy; and putting teaching, learning and participation in movement building with those most adversely affected at the center. The workshop offers an analytical and action framework that connects critical pedagogy, analysis, and vision with bottom-up struggles in the early 21st century, e.g., growing grassroots struggles and the Social Forum process for global social justice. We offer teaching strategies and teaching and learning tools for classroom and community that re-center around these realities. These include: popular education as a pedagogical strategy for creating a community of learners with a vision of social justice and social transformation; and two teaching and learning tools we have developed as activists and educators in Project South and in movement building spaces - the social history timeline, and the CVS (consciousness, vision and strategy) model of the movement building process - focusing on social history, social movements and lessons learned for building today's bottom-up social justice movement.

83. Research/Policy Workshop. Writing a Successful NSF Grant Proposal

Session Organizer: Jan E. Stets, University of California-Riverside

Panel: Jennifer Earl, University of California-Santa Barbara

85. Graduate Programs in Sociology

Hilton San Francisco, Yosemite Hall, Ballroom Level

Session Organizer: Margaret Weigers Vitullo, American Sociological Association

At this poster session, sociology graduate programs from around the country will display information about their program and its application and admissions processes. This session is intended to serve highly motivated undergraduate and Master's level students who wish to continue their education in sociology and are interested in learning about a broad range of programs while also having the opportunity to speak with program representatives in an inviting atmosphere.

The session provides both students and graduate programs with low-cost means for developing an initial relationship between prospective applicant and a school. Each year, students from the honors program and general student attendees attend the poster session.

On Saturday, August 8, at 2:30-4:10pm, department representatives will be on hand to answer questions from interested attendees. Poster displays will remain viewable during the entire Annual Meeting. Participating departments are listed below by poster number.

From its beginning, social theory has addressed central aspects of social life, including the transition from the rural to urban, the relationship between economic and social life and transformations of the cultural. However, all of the aforementioned and other aspects of social life also feature the relationships between humans and nonhuman animals - as commodities, expressions of familial patterns, and as contested and undefined objects and subjects. This section intends to address how social theory has neglected or marginalized the significance of relationships with nonhuman animals in central societal institutions and phenomena, and how reconsidering the roles and social positioning of nonhuman animals may serve to produce theories with more explanatory potential.

The session celebrates the 50th anniversary of the founding of the Medical Sociology Section. In the past half-century, medical sociologists have provided key insights and findings on social dimensions of health and health care ranging from causes and consequences of health disparities to the organization and financing of health care. Contributors to the 2010 Extra Issue of the Journal of Health and Social Behavior funded by the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation will review key findings on core topics from 50 years of sociological studies of health, illness, and healing and suggest the policy implications of those findings.

Coping with Climate Change: Dimensions of Injustice. J. Timmons Roberts, College of William Mary Race, Place, and the Environment in the Aftermath of Katrina.
Beverly Lillian Wright, Dillard University

Discussant: Kathleen J. Tierney, University of Colorado-Boulder
 In light of global climate change and related crises in energy and food production, this century will see a transition to low carbon economies with vast implications between and within human communities around the world: in the global North and South, in urban, suburban, and rural communities, and among racial, ethnic, class, age, gender, and regional divisions within communities. Presenters in this thematic session offer answers to these two questions: What are the threats to communities posed by global climate change, and how can sociology contribute to understanding and mitigating those threats?

114. Thematic Session. Ethnographies of Place

Session Organizer and Presider: Mitchell Duneier, Princeton University/City University of New York Panel: George Steinmetz, University of Michigan-Ann Arbor
Sudhir A. Venkatesh, Columbia University
Hilary Silver, Brown University

Discussant: Mary E. Pattillo, Northwestern University
 Though film and ethnography have long been linked in Anthropology, they have only recently appeared in sociology. This session presents ethnographers who have made films about inner cities discussing how the portrayal of the inner city and its residents in film affects how ethnography is done as well as how accurately it reflects the inner city.

 Session Organizer and Presider: Andreana L. Clay, San Francisco State University

Panel: Carlos Kareem Windham, Company of Prophets Meilani Clay, Howard University
Mako Fitts, Seattle University
Andreana L. Clay, San Francisco State University
 Art and politics merge with hip hop culture in the Spoken Word movement, especially among youth. Prominent in the Bay area, this form of public discourse typically engages grassroots sociological issues from the perspectives of young people. Several youth organizations have incorporated spoken word in their social justice agenda.

118. Professional Workshop. Web-based Networking: a New Tool for Success in Graduate School

 Session Organizer: Abby L. Ferber, University of Colorado-Denver
 Co-Leaders: Abby L. Ferber, University of Colorado-Denver
Kristenne M. Robison, Westminster College-New Wilmington
Wendy M. Christensen, University of Wisconsin- Madison
 We increasingly utilize web based social networking in our social lives, and we will examine the ways in which these technologies can be used to advance our professional lives as well. Web based social networking is evolving into a unique space for graduate students to learn more about socialization into the profession; connect with other graduate students; meet potential mentors; experience informal mentoring; seek jobs; and connect with others around both research and teaching interests. In this workshop we will discuss specific examples of places graduate students can learn more about the profession and network with others in their field, including listservs, blogs, and social networking sites.

119. Research/Policy Workshop. National Institute of Mental Health - Funding and Data Opportunities

Session Organizer: Mercedes Rubio, National Institute of Mental Health
 Panel: Alfonso R. Latoni, National Institute on Aging
Aileen Schulte, National Institute of Mental Health
Yonette F. Thomas, National Institutes of Health/National Institute on Drug Abuse
 This workshop intends to provide the participants with greater working knowledge of the types of funding mechanisms, application process, review and decision making of federal training grants, in particular those sponsored by the National Institutes of Health. The workshop will be interactive where participants are encouraged to ask questions.

120. Teaching Workshop. Teaching Conversation Analysis: Practical Experience and Methods

Session Organizers: Ruth Helen Parry, University of Nottingham;
Virginia Teas Gill, Illinois State University
 Leader: Ruth Helen Parry, University of Nottingham Panel: Nick Llewellyn, Warwick Business School
Steven E. Clayman, University of California-Los Angeles
 This workshop will bring together practical wisdom, skills, resources and experience relating to teaching the methods and perspectives of conversation analysis and ethnomethodology to undergraduate and postgraduate students. It will cover teaching within both academic social science and professional/vocational courses. Many individual sociologists are designing and delivering teaching in these areas, but there has been limited sharing of practice, experience and ideas. This workshop aims to improve this situation by publicizing and debating established and innovative practice. Three experienced academics from the US and UK will present their own experiences and materials, and workshop participants will have the opportunity to respond, and to discuss and share their own experiences. This workshop is also the launch pad for a newly established online collection of resources for teaching conversation analysis and ethnomethodology.

- Gender Earnings Gaps among Young Professional Managers: How Career Patterns Differentially Affect Earnings. Jennifer M. Hitler, University of Chicago; Stanislav D. Dobrev, INSEAD
- This session looks at gender at work from an organizational/stratification perspective. All the papers in the session use novel data and contribute new insights to our understanding of the organizational mechanisms that affect gendered work conditions and outcomes: a paper based on laboratory experiments explores the gendered meaning of meritocracy; a paper using newly released federal data comparing gender gaps in top management ranks and more traditional female occupations; a paper on new challenges to gender inequality in the globalized academic job market; a paper reevaluating the effect of women's career patterns on gender pay gaps, and a paper looking at gender inequality in Japan beyond the traditional focus on life time employment and seniority. This session will have a unique structure where presenters will begin their presentation by relating their work to the previous work discussed. This structure will emphasize the overarching themes without the need of a discussant (thereby allowing five papers to be presented - 12 minutes each).

Pop Music and Cultural Nationalism in South Korea: From 'Group Sound' Rock to Chongt'ong Hip-hop. Pil Ho Kim, University of Wisconsin-Madison

Discussant: Ronald A. Lembo, Amherst College

The promise of multiculturalism is a new kind of identity and existence that challenges isolated, nationally or otherwise bounded constructions of racial, ethnic, gender, and sexual identity. Examining a variety of current popular youth cultural manifestations in transnational and resolutely national (US) contexts, from Korean hip hop to Japanese commix imported to the US, from fiction oriented toward US teen girls to movies and advertising that portray interracial relationships, this session explores both hopeful disruptions of monocultures and their surprising but relentless reinscriptions. How can we conceptualize the forces that pressure toward this outcome?

143. Thematic Session. Queer Communities and Family Relationships

 Presider: Christopher Carrington, San Francisco State University
 Black and Gay in L.A.: The Relationships Lesbians and Gay Men have with their Racial & Religious Communities. Mignon R. Moore, University of California-Los Angeles

Lessons of the Racialized Family: Sociology and the Construction of Heteronormativity. Susana Pena, Bowling Green State University

Consuming (Gay) Fatherhood. Ellen Lewin, University of Iowa
 Community has been a fundamental resource for lesbians, gay men, bisexuals, transgenders, transsexuals and other queer individuals and families. We first learn to do family and relationships more generally in the families in which we grow up, whether biological, adopted, or otherwise constituted. Since many of these families adhere to some version of compulsory heterosexuality, models for performing family are often constrained by a narrow nuclear family model. Consequently, developing alternative family models forms a central task for gays and lesbians and others who do not fit into the normative heterosexual family form. In fact, people who are single, coupled, in multiple relationships regardless of sexuality are also viewed as queer when viewed alongside the normative model of family. The distinction between family of origin and family of choice has been especially important for lesbians, gay men, bisexuals, transsexuals and other who are constructing different types of families. The construction and experience of community varies across class, race, gender and family forms. This panel will explore the diversity of family relationships as they intersect with different queer, ethnic, and racial communities. How do different communities provide support for diverse family forms? How do they inhibit diversity of expression and family relationships?

144. Thematic Session. Religion in the Reshaping of Political Community: Comparative Perspectives (co-sponsored by the Association for the Sociology of Religion)

Hilton San Francisco, Franciscan C, Ballroom Level

Session Organizer and Presider: Michele Dillon, University of New Hampshire

The Politics of Religious Identity in the United States. Michael Hout and Claude S. Fischer, University of California-Berkeley

Using Religious Symbols to Redefine the Nation: Evidence from Poland and Quebec. Genevieve Zubrzycki, University of Michigan-Ann Arbor

Politics and Religion in the Production of Civil Society in Southeast Asia. Bryan S. Turner, National University of Singapore

Until recent decades, the link between religious identity and political community was relatively continuous, straightforward, and uncontested. Whether at the local, regional, or national societal level, particular religious groups tended to identify with a particular political community and/or mobilize around particular political issues. The many societal changes that have occurred since the 1970s have altered this picture. World religions including Christianity, Judaism, and Islam, have all undergone significant institutional changes in adapting to shifting geo-political, cultural and demographic forces, while, in turn, adherents to these respective religious traditions increasingly contest the nature of religious membership and its implications for political identity and activism. These multilayered changes necessarily produce tension in how discrete religious and political identities intersect in everyday life and compete for cultural legitimacy. This panel will focus on the varied ways in which transformations in religious and political identities are reshaping the politics of community in different socio-cultural contexts.

145. Thematic Session. Understanding Democratic Renewal: The Movement to Elect Barack Obama

Session Organizer: Dana R. Fisher, Columbia University

Presider: Elisabeth S. Clemens, University of Chicago

What It Will Take to Make Obama a Successful Transformational President. Peter Dreier, Occidental College

Harnessing Technology to Mobilize the Ground War. Dana R. Fisher, Columbia University

Organizing to Win: How the Obama 2008 Campaign Really Worked. Marshall Ganz, Harvard University

Community Organizing Goes National: The 2008 Presidential Campaign. Heidi Jean Swarts, Rutgers University-Newark

The Obama Campaign is said to have followed the model of a populist movement to get Barack Obama elected President, but how did the campaign actually mobilize a volunteer army of American citizens? Can the movement survive the transition to President? This session will address these questions and end with a discussion about what are the lessons to be learned from this electoral campaign

146. Thematic Session. In the Long Shadow of the Plantation: The Black Belt and the Global New South

Session Organizer: Joan L. Weston, Ohio State University

Presider: Melvin L. Oliver, University of California-Santa Barbara

Reclaiming the Rural South: 1890 Land Grant Universities Redefine the Black Belt. Rosalind Harris, University of Kentucky

Workers Rights and Union Organizing: Lessons of the Civil Rights Movement for Grassroots Organizing in the Black Belt. Aldon D. Morris, Northwestern University

Opportunities for and Challenges to Community-based Asset Building and Cooperative Economic Development in the South. Jessica Gardon Nembhard, City University of New York-John Jay College

Between Black and White: Latino Immigration and the Historic Black Belt in the Old and New Global South. Ronald C. Wimberley, North Carolina State University

Development Arrested: The Mississippi Delta and the Reconstruction of New Orleans. Clyde Woods, University of California-Santa Barbara

This session allows us to revisit and reexamine a region that once garnered the attention of sociology's best and brightest and a nation at war with itself over the very meaning of community. More specifically, it offers sociologists an opportunity to examine the community-building technologies, both new and old, used to manage global exchanges at the local level. This session addresses two broad themes: (1) the new geographies of community and (2) community-building and the politics of the global New South. The central question that animates this session is: Are Black Belt communities of the global New South beyond the shadow of the plantation?

147. Special Session. Community and Place in Public Mental Health: Sociological and Multidisciplinary

Session Organizer: Caroline McKay, Columbia University

Presider: Bruce G. Link, Columbia University

Panel: Anne Pebley, University of California-Los Angeles

Karen Albright, University of Colorado-Denver

Blair Wheaton, University of Toronto

Discussant: Richard M. Carpiano, University of British Columbia

This session will bring together sociologists and other social scientists who represent complementary as well as contrasting point of view to highlight current debates underlying shared environments as social space, geographic place, and source of individual and community mental health. By focusing on where resources and risk are located and the nature of the individual-community relationship, this session will provide a platform for how can we better understand contexts within which mental health is created and embedded in conceptions of social and physical space. In addition, this session provides an opportunity for further linking the sociology of mental health to broader themes, theories, and perspectives in sociology.

148. Professional Workshop. Becoming a Dean: Sociologists as Academic Leaders

Session Organizer: Roberta Lessor, Chapman University

Co-Leaders: Roberta Lessor, Chapman University

Charles F. Hohm, California State University-Dominguez Hills

Two sociologists who are academic deans will relate their experiences leading liberal arts colleges of different configurations in a public and a private setting, arguing that sociology is an excellent background for academic leadership. The discussion will highlight managing organizational change in the context of strategic planning, advancing the college through fund raising, hiring and developing faculty, identifying and cultivating leadership, and maintaining fiscal oversight. The workshop is intended for faculty interested in seeking administrative positions and will feature discussion format to take participants' questions. The session leaders will provide handouts, and would also refer participants to their recent articles on academic leadership in The American Sociologist, Vol. 39, September, 2008, to additional background on relevant issues.

149. Teaching Workshop. Facebook and Old Farts: Boomer Faculty Meet Techno-Savvy Students

Session Organizer: Kerry J. Strand, Hood College

Co-Leaders: Kerry J. Strand, Hood College

Theodore C. Wagenaar, Miami University

We are two Baby Boomer faculty members, with a collective 68 years teaching experience, who find that the generation gap has widened to where we must struggle to adapt to current and constantly changing technology to remain effective in the classroom. Topics include the pros and cons of participating in social networking sites, to text or not to text, the sociology of reality television, and YouTube as pedagogy. The last half of the session is spent in discussion so that audience members can share their own crises, challenges, and strategies for engaging and entertaining our Gen-Y students.

150. Student Forum Professional Workshop. The Confident Graduate Student: Successful Strategies for Dealin with Feelings of Self-Doubt

Parc 55 Hotel, Powell II, Level Three

Session Organizers: Elyshia Aseltine, University of Texas-Austin

George P. Mason, Wayne State University

Leaders: Simone Browne, University of Texas-Austin

Rosalind S. Chou, Texas A&M University

Graduate students often grapple with feelings of inadequacy and self-doubt. We are plagued by questions like, "Am I smart enough to be in this program? When will the faculty realize that I am a fake? Why does it seem like the other graduate students are so together? Am I the only one who feels so inept?" We often feel as though we are struggling alone, but in fact, our struggle is common one, one that even has a name: Imposter Syndrome. In this panel, graduate students (and new faculty) will share their experiences as well as some of the strategies they have developed to successfully deal with feelings of self-doubt.

The panel will feature research at the cutting edge of the new social studies of childhood, focusing on the social construction of age in varying contexts, children's active participation in their communities or neighborhoods; and how social contexts produce or construct particular trajectories for children or youth. Papers are drawn from US and international contexts, based on research with preschoolers and adolescents, found in schools and neighborhoods, engaging with issues of race, gender, poverty, and politics. Unifying the panel is the papers' shared focus on the experiences of childhood and youth as forged in the mutable convergence of age, power and social inequality.

178. Presidential Panel. Through the Lens of Gender, Race, Sexuality and Class: The Obama Family and the American Dream

Presider: Elizabeth Higginbotham, University of Delaware

Panel: Barrie Thorne, University of California-Berkeley
Cheryl Townsend Gilkes, Colby College

Keeping it Real / Keeping it Proper: Race, Class, and Gender, and Obama Family Values. Alford A. Young, University of Michigan-Ann Arbor

The End of Ideology, Again: Barack Obama, Identity Politics and the Future of Race Relations in a Post-Race, Post Civil Rights, Colorblind America. Charles A. Gallagher, La Salle University

Martin Luther King's "I Have a Dream" speech not only imagined a future of a democratic, inclusive national community, it also pointed out the ways in which social inequalities undermined America's possibilities. For example, the American dream of self-renewal, of making oneself over and getting a fresh start, reflects beliefs in America as a nation of immigrants, opportunity and freedom. Yet African Americans, women, sexual minorities, and poor people have pointed to invisible glass ceilings that have limited their dreams of upward social mobility and self-renewal. Traditional ideas about faith and family underpin the American dream, yet those whose family structures and religious traditions stray too far from traditional marriage or Christianity also encounter barriers. In essence, the American dream constitutes a curious combination of ideals that are refracted through changing social relations of gender, race, sexuality and class. Barack Obama's election represents one historic moment in this ongoing process of continuity of ideals and changing social realities. By focusing on the social meanings attached to Barack Obama, Michelle Obama, and/or the Obama family as the new First Family, especially those advanced within mass media, this session explores this core relationship between the American dream and ever-changing patterns of gender, race, sexuality and class in the United States.

179. Thematic Session. Barriers to Community: Social Costs of the Mortgage Meltdown and Policy Responses for Equitable/ Sustainable Development

Parc 55 Hotel, Cyril Magnin II, Level Three

Session Organizer: Gregory D. Squires, George Washington University

Panel: James Carr, National Community Reinvestment Coalition
Making Lemonade: Stabilizing Communities as the Mortgage Crisis Dominoes. Kalima Rose, PolicyLink

Segregation and the Subprime Crisis. Derek S. Hyra, Office of the Comptroller of the Currency

Stopping the Next Meltdown: Structural Change in Financial Services Oversight. Gail Hillebrand, Consumers Union

The rise in subprime mortgages and predatory lending practices in recent years have cost many families their homes, reduced property values in many neighborhoods (and tax revenues for local governments), increased crime rates, and threatened the stability of the economy worldwide. At the same time many financial institutions, regulatory agencies, and elected officials have generated a wide range of responses. This session will explore the many social costs of recent developments in financial services and the more promising approaches for equitable and sustainable development for metropolitan areas in the US and elsewhere.

180. Thematic Session. Communities and Political Engagement in the Middle East

Parc 55 Hotel, Cyril Magnin III, Level Three

Session Organizer: Katherine Meyer, Ohio State University

Panel: Mounira Maya Charrad, University of Texas-Austin

Charles Kurzman, University of North Carolina-

Helen M. Rizzo, American University-Cairo

Discussant: J. Craig Jenkins, Ohio State University

The session will focus on traditional communities (e.g., kin groups) and community structures (e.g., neighborhood groups) as well as recently established and emerging communities (e.g., regional women's associations in the Middle East.) Viewing these as centers for developing political identities through social clubs and mosque associations and for political mobilization and dissent, this session will examine the nature and goals of these communities as well as the processes through which group identity is formed and strategies are developed. The session will open up discourse among sociologists who study social and political change in the Middle East, political sociologists interested in civic engagement; those interested in social movements, their emergence continuance and impact on social change; those interested in geographically specific, homogeneous communities as well as in large scale political communities; and those interested in specific topics related to political identity and dissent, such as gender, religion, and social stratification.

181. Thematic Session. Environmental Justice and Immigrant/Refugee Communities

Session Organizers: Stella M. Capek, Hendrix College; David Pellow,

University of Minnesota-Minneapolis

Presider: Stella M. Capek, Hendrix College

Panel: Diana Pei Wu, University of California-Berkeley

David Pellow, University of Minnesota-

Lisa Sun-Hee Park, University of Minnesota-

Julian Agyeman, Tufts University

Erika Gonzalez, Highlander Center and PODER

This session explores the new politics of community through the lens of environmental justice and immigrant/refugee communities. The panel combines scholarly and activist perspectives on environmental justice issues in a variety of national and global locations. Julian Agyeman has published extensively on environmental justice and sustainability and is the founder of Britain's Black Environment Network. Erika Gonzalez represents the Highlander Center and People in Defense of Earth and Her Resources (PODER, Austin, Texas). Diana Pei Wu is the Director of Community Planning at the Bay Area organization Asian Neighborhood Design. David Pellow researches environmental justice issues in communities of color in the U.S. and globally, and works with community-based, national, and international organizations dedicated to improving the living and working environments for people of color, immigrants, indigenous peoples, and working class communities. Lisa Sun-Hee Park's work explores immigrant labor, race, gender, urban social policy, and environmental justice.

182. Thematic Session. Globalization and Sexual Communities: Queer Tourism, Migration, and Sex Cultures

Session Organizer: Jill R. Williams, University of Colorado-Boulder

Presider: Matthew C Brown, University of Colorado-

Queer Consumption: Exploring San Francisco's Chinatown and Castro Districts. Nan Alamilla Boyd, San Francisco State University

Lionel Cantu's 'The Sexuality of Migration'. Salvador Vidal-Ortiz, American University; Nancy A. Naples, University of Connecticut

Not Belonging: Cross-dressing Law and Anti-immigrant Politics in 19th Century San Francisco. Clare Sears, University of California-Santa Cruz

Mexican Gay Men's Sexual Migration to California: Findings from the Trayectos Study. Hector Carrillo, San Francisco State University; Jorge Fontdevila, California State University-Fullerton

This session will provide an important sample of the research on transnational mobility and sexual communities through a focus on sexuality, tourism, and migration, with particular attention to San Francisco. While previous scholars have ignored or downplayed the role of sexual desire and encounters, recent queer and feminist scholars prioritize sexual cultures' impact on community and examine it in relation to post-colonial forms of mobility enabled by globalization. Queer tourism and migration are sites with which to explore issues of sexual cultures and community and the intersecting effects of sexuality, race, class, gender and nationality on local and international flows of individuals.

183. Thematic Session. The Incorporation of Latino Immigrants in New Destination US Communities

Session Organizer: Katharine M. Donato, Vanderbilt University

Does Place Matter? Comparing Latino Immigrant Incorporation in New Rural and Urban Destinations. William A. Kandel, United States Department of Agriculture

Latina/o Labor Market Outcomes in New Destinations: Variation by Place. Katharine M. Donato, Vanderbilt University

Immigrant Incorporation and Local Responses. Audrey Singer, The Brookings Institution

The last two decades have witnessed unprecedented growth of the foreign born population in new destination areas across the United States. This session will tackle the issue of immigrant incorporation in new U.S. destinations: what form and pace does it take, to what extent does it vary by place, and how do localities differ in their responses to new immigrant neighbors? In light of Congress' failure to pass federal immigration reform, and the post-9/11 period when immigration has become increasingly tied to national security, the presenters will focus on dimensions of Latino born immigrants in new destinations and consider how actions by states and localities affect the incorporation process.

184. Special Session. Science Policy, National Priorities, and Opportunities for the Social Science (part of the Research Support Forum)

Session Organizer and Presider: Lee Herring, American Sociological Association

Timothy P. Condon, National Institute on Drug Abuse

Leadership of the National Institute on Aging (NIA) and the National Institute on Drug Abuse (NIDA) will describe the extramural basic research opportunities at these two Institutes of the National Institutes of Health (NIH). Alfonso Latoni, Deputy Chief of the Scientific Review Branch at the National Institute on Aging, will discuss research opportunities at the NIA and the recent overhaul of NIH peer review process that will facilitate research grant processing. Timothy Condon, Deputy Director of NIDA, will give an overview of social and behavioral science opportunities at NIDA. At center stage will be drug abuse research and the important contributions the social sciences can make. The session will be of interest especially to attendees hailing from aging and the life course, as well as medical, addiction, and mental health research domains. Sociologists receive millions of dollars annually to do basic research in these areas and this session will interest researchers considering NIDA as a funding source for their investigations.

185. Author Meets Critics Session. Survival of the Knitted: Immigrant Social Networks in a Stratified World (Stanford University Press, 2007) by Vilna Francine Bashi Treitler

187. Didactic Seminar. Doing Research with the Wisconsin Longitudinal Study

Hilton San Francisco, Franciscan B, Ballroom Level
 Session Organizer: Robert M. Hauser, University of Wisconsin-Madison
 Leaders: Robert M. Hauser, University of Wisconsin-Madison

Carol Lynn Roan, University of Wisconsin-Madison
 The Wisconsin Longitudinal Study (WLS) is hosting a training seminar for anyone who wants to learn more about the WLS. Along with the history and content of the 51 year old project, we will discuss our collection of DNA data and plans for in-person interviews with the graduate and sibling panel starting later in 2009. The Wisconsin Longitudinal Study (WLS) is a long-term study of a random sample of 10,317 men and women who graduated from Wisconsin high schools in 1957. It has been supported by the National Institute on Aging since 1991. The WLS provides an opportunity to study the life course, intergenerational transfers and relationships, family functioning, physical and mental health and well-being, and morbidity and mortality from late adolescence through age 65. WLS data also cover social background, youthful aspirations, schooling, military service, labor market experiences, family characteristics and events, social participation, religious affiliation, psychological characteristics, and retirement. Survey data have been collected from the graduates or their parents in 1957, 1964, 1975, 1992, and 2004; from a selected sibling in 1977, 1994, and 2005; from the spouse of the original respondent in 2004; from the spouse of the selected sibling in 2006; and from widow(ers) of the graduates and siblings in 2006-07. We are currently processing DNA samples from graduates and randomly selected siblings. Almost 85 percent of surviving graduates continue to participate in the WLS. Public data, documentation, and publications are available online at <http://www.ssc.wisc.edu/wlsresearch/>.

188. Departmental Workshop. Are the Sociological Titles You and Your Students Need in Your Institution's Library? Building Collection Standards for Sociology Departments

 Session Organizer and Leader: David E. Woolwine, Hofstra University
 A presentation by sociology librarians of ways to assess sociology library collections and services.

189. Professional Workshop. Strategies on the Road to Full Professor

Session Organizer: Barbara Jane Risman, University of Illinois-Chicago

Co-Leaders: Maxine P. Atkinson, North Carolina State University
Barbara Jane Risman, University of Illinois-Chicago
Beth Rushing, University of Washington-Tacoma
Scott Coltrane, University of Oregon

A workshop designed to help Associate Professors strategize about the most effective means to move through the ranks to Full Professor in a timely manner. The presenters are sociologists who have had experience in administration at a broad spectrum of colleges and universities.

190. Teaching Workshop. Introducing the ASA's New Teaching Resource Center Digital Library

Session Organizer and Leader: Margaret Weigers Vitullo, American Sociological Association

This workshop will introduce participants to the ASA's new digital library of teaching and learning resources. The first part of the workshop will include a brief history of the ASA's Teaching Resource Center (TRC) and how the digital library fits into and extends the TRC tradition. The second part of the workshop will give participants the information they need to successfully navigate the new system and make use of its features. Finally, the workshop will cover the citation format that is being introduced as part of the digital library and how effective citation of teaching materials can provide new evidence of the scholarship of teaching and learning for promotion and tenure review committees. Participants are encouraged to bring ideas for materials they would like to submit to the digital library. At the end of the workshop participants will be familiar with the browse, search, and download functions of the on-line digital library. They will know how to submit their own new and adapted teaching resources to the digital library, and will be familiar with the review criteria and process for getting materials accepted for inclusion. They will also be familiar with the citation format for materials from the digital library.

Socialism, Industrialization and Market Transition: Trends in Intergenerational Social Mobility in China. Xiaogang Wu, Hong Kong University

Discussant: William Parish, University of Chicago

This session is created to present findings of the Chinese General Social Survey on issues of social change in reform-era China. Modeled after the American GSS, the CGSS is a national sampling survey of China's urban and rural households, and its datasets have contributed to a new public data archive that is accessible internationally (www.chinagss.org). Since its inception in 2003, the CGSS annual (2003-2006) and biennial (since 2006) surveys have covered a variety of topics of sociological significance. The invited panelists are some of the public users of this data archive, and their analytic results focus on the rise and implications of nonagricultural employment in rural China, the long-term impact of state policies on individual well-being, age-cohort-period effects on personal happiness, and trends of intergenerational social mobility during the transition toward a market-oriented society.

Ever since the publication of "Bowling Alone," Robert Putnam's (2000) seminal work on the decline of social capital in the United States, a debate has raged about the impact of new communication technologies on the production, regulation and maintenance of social capital. Significant developments in the past few years warrant a fresh examination of the sociological implications: "social computing," the use of the Internet for social interaction and maintenance of social networks has exploded, especially among younger populations. A generation of students who have been online throughout their entire education is now graduating, getting jobs, and otherwise venturing out into the world. What will the effect of their use of new technologies be on social capital? Will socio-economic and racial differences in participation lead to new inequalities and separations? These sites also encourage the maintenance of ties over a long time, e.g. from grade school and beyond, and over distance, e.g. previous places of residence. Will these lead to "bridging" forms of social capital via weak ties? This panel will address these questions from a variety of perspectives.

220. Thematic Session. Reconsidering Community in the Aftermath of Hurricane Katrina

Session Organizer: Lynn Weber, University of South Carolina

Presider: Kai Erikson, Yale University

Panel: Pamela Jean Jenkins, University of New Orleans

Rachel E. Luft, University of New Orleans

Lee M. Miller, Sam Houston State University

Jessica Warner Pardee, University of Central Florida

Lori Peek, Colorado State University

Katrina and the social transformations it has produced provide a unique opportunity to examine traditional, regional, and familial communities in the context of dramatic assault and change. Through reports from the Social Science Research Council Research Network on Persons Displaced by Katrina, this session presents the work of a collective of twelve feminist scholars conducting studies in thirteen different locations across the country. The studies demonstrate how the ongoing experience of Katrina in shaping and reshaping disparate communities structured by race, class, and gender enlighten and challenge existing notions of community. This session will be organized as a panel discussion summarizing thematic foci in all twelve studies.

The Blockade of the World-class City: Protest and Crisis in Calcutta, India. Ananya Roy, University of California-Berkeley

The nature of redevelopment and scholarship about it has changed much due to the transnationalization of city landscapes and urban lives. Redevelopment, moreover, has become a global phenomenon as cities strive for "world-class urbanism" from Dubai to Shanghai to Mexico City to Johannesburg. Still, most sociological research on redevelopment - despite accounting for transnational influences - focuses parochially on North America and Western Europe. But do globalized redevelopment ideals render the same sociological processes of community politics and landscape production across diverse geopolitical and socioeconomic contexts? How do paradigmatic experiences in New York City, Paris, and Berlin bear on Bombay and Budapest? Might the post-Katrina experience in New Orleans share more with the crisis-ridden remakings of Calcutta and Beirut? This session assembles a worldwide cadre of redevelopment sociologists to enhance lessons between cities and regions that have much in common empirically but seldom are part of the same scholarly conversation.

222. Public Sociology in Action. Honoring the Contributions of Barbara Ehrenreich

Panel: Barbara Ehrenreich, Author

Donald Tomaskovic-Devey, University of Massachusetts-Amherst

Mary E. Pattillo, Northwestern University

Myra Marx Ferree, University of Wisconsin-Madison

Be sure to attend this special public sociology session. The winner of the 2009 ASA Award for Excellence in the Reporting of Social Issues is the prolific author Barbara Ehrenreich. Ehrenreich is an American feminist, democratic socialist and political activist. She is a widely read columnist and essayist, and the author of nearly 20 books including Nickel and Dimed: On (Not) Getting By In America (2001); Global Woman: Nannies, Maids, and Sex Workers in the New Economy (ed., with Arlie Hochschild) (2003); Bait and Switch: The (Futile) Pursuit of the American Dream (2005). Ehrenreich will give a talk on Social Class and the Unraveling of the Economy.

223. Regional Spotlight Session. Migration and Shifting Sexualities among Latinos/as in California: Implications for HIV (co-sponsored with the Sociologists AIDS Network)

Session Organizers: Jorge Fontdevila, California State University-Fullerton; Hector Carrillo, San Francisco State University

Panel: Hector Carrillo, San Francisco State University

Xóchitl Castañeda, University of California-

Patricia Zavella, University of California-Santa Cruz

Rebecca Hester, University of California-Santa Cruz

Matt G. Mutchler, California State University-Dominguez Hills

Discussant: Jorge Fontdevila, California State University-Fullerton
 Latino/a immigrants who relocate to California experience considerable changes in their sexualities. They may encounter new sexual identities and scripts that are different from the range of possibilities they imagine available in their own home countries. Often differences in sexual rights between their home countries and California are very tangible. Moreover, gender relations between men and women may shift dramatically across international borders. And yet the complex implications of such migratory movements for sexual health, in particular HIV/AIDS, remain understudied. Whether recent Latino/a immigrants in California are more or less vulnerable to HIV infection is still the subject of considerable debate. In part this is the case because many studies of immigrant health pay little attention to the contextual changes in sexual practices and identities that result from the relocation of immigrants into widely different host communities, the sexual cultures that immigrants bring from their own home countries, and the effects of their back-and-forth transnational movements between home and host countries. This panel brings together a number of key scholars conducting research on these critical issues to shed further insight on the HIV/AIDS implications of Latino migration to California.

224. Didactic Seminar. Protection of Human Subjects in the Social Sciences

Session Organizer: Felice J. Levine, American Educational Research Association

Panel: John M. Kennedy, Indiana University

Thomas L. Van Valey, Western Michigan University

This Didactic Seminar examines human research protection issues in the design, development, implementation, and review of social science research. The seminar provides sociologists with an understanding of key concepts that inform federal guidelines on human research protection (e.g., consent, privacy and confidentiality, benefits and harms, level of risk) and the tools for assessing best ethical practices in the context of social science research. It also offers guidance on the preparation of protocols and effective communication with Institutional Review Boards (IRBs). In addressing ethical issues in human research, the seminar focuses on a breadth of methodological approaches that are used-often in combination-in sociology and other social sciences (e.g., surveys, interviews, observations, ethnographies, case studies, laboratory and field experiments, secondary analysis of extant data). Attention is paid to human research protection issues involved in data collection, data use, data protection, data reporting, and data dissemination. This three-hour Didactic Seminar is comprised of three major units: understanding key concepts and ethical guidance in human subjects research, putting human research protections into practice in sociological research, and comprehending the IRB process and the role of review. Building upon research examples, the seminar examines how to weigh human research protection issues with varying substantive topics, methods, contexts, and populations under study. A volume of specially prepared readings and background materials is provided, and participants will be asked to complete in advance a brief information form to help structure the seminar responsive to the concerns, interests, and expertise of attendees.

225. Departmental Workshop. Learning Disabilities, ADHD, Visual, Auditory, Motor Skills Limitations - What Departments Can Do

Session Organizer and Leader: Carol A. Minton, California Baptist University

This will be an interactive workshop that includes practical information gathered from several universities and individuals with disabilities themselves to provide the latest adaptive equipment, course materials, and practical suggestions to provide a positive teaching and learning experience in the classroom setting. We will also have a time for sharing information and practical solutions that participants would to contribute.

226. Professional Workshop. Transnational Approaches to Gender, Sexuality and Feminism: A Workshop for Scholars, Mentors, and Mentees

Session Organizer: Jayati Lal, University of Michigan

Leader: Vrushali Patil, Florida International University

Panel: Paola Bacchetta, University of California-Berkeley

Jyoti Puri, Simmons College

France Winddance Twine, University of California-Santa Barbara

Orit Avishai, Fordham University

Danielle Antoinette Hidalgo, University of California-Santa Barbara

This workshop aims to provide strategies and advice on conducting research and teaching, navigating the job market, and networking for graduate students and junior faculty who are engaged in scholarship and research on transnational feminism and international research on gender and sexuality. It brings senior scholars who have extensive research experience in these areas, and who are professionally established in the discipline, and junior scholars who have recent experiences of being in the job market and of conducting fieldwork for their dissertations, into conversation to share their experiences and offer advice to those newer to the field. The workshop is thus targeted specifically at creating a network of sociologists in a growing field in which there are many junior scholars who do not have local access to mentors in their area of expertise. Scholarship on transnational issues on gender, sexuality and feminism has emerged as a vibrant area of inquiry in sociology in recent years, through its interdisciplinary engagements with anthropology, area and ethnic studies, and women's studies. Comparative-historical approaches and fieldwork-based research in non-Western sites has led to a productive reframing of the analytic centrality of gender (vis-à-vis class, race, nation, and sexuality) that emerged from scholarship on Western and Anglo-American settings. Through this workshop at the national ASA meeting, we aim to link junior scholars with those more established in the field, and to create a network of support, advice and critical feedback for those scholars who do not have mentors locally available to them in their departments or at regional professional meetings. We thus plan to have a dual format for the workshop: (i) In the first portion, we will have panel members speak about their experiences illustrating some of the pathways that they took and dilemmas that they faced in their scholarship and professionally; (ii) In the second portion, we will invite audience members, and especially junior scholars, to speak informally about some of the difficulties that they have faced—whether stemming from fieldwork and research experiences, resistance to their research topic from their departments or advisors, or those stemming from the challenges of writing and framing analytic and theoretical arguments—that the panelists' will respond to.

227. Teaching Workshop. New Teaching Techniques: The Internet as a Site for Theory Application and Student Activism

Session Organizer: Tracy E. Ore, Saint Cloud State University

Co-Leaders: Tracy E. Ore, Saint Cloud State University

Lisa Dawn Wade, Occidental College

Gwen Sharp, Nevada State College

Using commonly consumed items (advertisements, food), presenters will discuss how they use blogs, web sites, and other media to engage students in thinking about social change related to oppression around issues of race, class, gender and sexuality.

The Invisible Partners: Co-habiting Males as 'Caring Daddies' in Inner-City 'Mother-Only' Households. Andrew Golub, Eloise Dunlap, Bruce D. Johnson and Ellen Benoit, National Development Research Institute

This session focuses on family and kinship relations in economically disadvantaged families, using both qualitative and quantitative approaches. Authors address relevant substantive topics such as women's relations with a broad array of extended kin, kinship network interactions, definitions of family-household boundaries, cultural practices within kin networks, and the impact of social and institutional factors on family life. These studies give particular attention to gender as male and female family perspectives are discussed, which further nuance SES. As a whole, these papers provide an opportunity to consider substantive, theoretical, and policy issues relevant to research on economically disadvantaged kinship systems.

Discussant: Jane D. McLeod, Indiana University-

The transition to adulthood is a highly formative period and a time of health risk and vulnerability. Whereas health problems may significantly impede educational attainment and successful transitions to adult roles, difficulties in making such transitions may also have negative consequences for health. The papers in this session examine how parental resources influence health trajectories up to the time of transition; race and gender variability in the effects of health on educational attainment; the mental health consequences of early transitions and unfulfilled expectations; and differences among the foreign born, second and third generations in weight trajectories over time.

Discussants: Robert Kleidman, Cleveland State University; Marshall Ganz, Harvard University

Deepening democracy in America requires not only political leadership, but also institutional and cultural work to reshape the broad political culture of American society. This panel will analyze the role of community organizing in promoting that transformation in labor, foundation, healthcare, and religious sectors. What changes are taking place that hold promise for long-term democratic renewal, in parallel with current changes in political leadership? Where organizing efforts must be challenged to greater ambition or more effective work? Panelists and discussants are outstanding scholars and/or public intellectual leaders in these efforts, and discussion will draw on grounded experience and theoretical insight to analyze the path ahead.

257. Presidential Panel. Intersectionality: A Theoretical Paradigm for Community?

Presider: Nancy A. Naples, University of Connecticut

Panel: Helen Meekosha, University of New South Wales-Australia
 Social Theoretical Perspectives on Intersectionality. Gudrun-Axeli Knapp, University of Hanover-Germany

Intersectionality: The Travails of Traveling Theory. Kimberlé Crenshaw, University of California-Los Angeles

Intersectionality and Belonging. Nira Yuval-Davis, University of East London

Discussant: Nancy A. Naples, University of Connecticut

This session explores how intersectional paradigms that accompany race/class/gender scholarship might contribute to new understandings of both the concept of community and the workings of actual communities.

Intersectional scholarship has focused on relational processes among different entities (the “inter” location), on relationships among entities that are often seen as non-related to one another, different from one another or even contradicting one another. Just as intersectionality investigates multiple forms of interconnections, the very concept of community involves the dynamic negotiation of differences. Intersectional scholarship often retains a social justice impetus that distinguishes it from other theoretical paradigms. This social justice dynamic also affects communities on local, national and international arenas. Using their own work as a touchstone for analysis, this panel of internationally recognized scholars will share their perspectives on intersectionality and community.

258. Thematic Session. Constructing Identities in the Context of Community Structures

Session Organizers: Patrick Carr and Judith Gerson, Rutgers University

Presider: Patrick Carr, Rutgers University

Panel: Janet Jacobs, University of Colorado-

Nazli Kibria, Boston University

Rebecca C. King-O’Riain, National University of Ireland-Maynooth

Discussant: Judith Gerson, Rutgers University

The study of identities has been the object of sociological inquiry in various forms throughout much of the 20th century and increasingly in recent years has become a prominent intellectual touchstone in several fields of inquiry within the discipline. While earlier formulations centered on discussions of the relationship of the self and society, and the importance of individuals to groups and organizations, contemporary projects have addressed some of these same themes but opened up investigations to include projects on the nation, local and regional communities as well as transnational configurations. Some of the most innovative work stems from an understanding of structural arrangements, which scholars have come to recognize as malleable, contested and variable. As a consequence, the study of constructing identities has moved from assumptions of their singularity, unity and stability to an emphasis on multiplicity and hybridity, contestation and variability. Panelists will review the best contemporary scholarship on identity construction in their fields of expertise with the goal of elucidating the state of knowledge about constructing identities and the work that remains to be done.

259. Thematic Session. Feminism(s) 2.0: Gender, Sexuality, Race, and Community in Cyberspace

Session Organizer and Presider: Jessie Daniels, City University of New York-Hunter College

Technofeminism: The Politics of Production and Consumption.

Judy Wajcman, London School of Economics

The Diversity of Digital Cultures of Use. Saskia Sassen, Columbia University

Ciberfeminismo(s) 2.0 in the 2000s: Evolutions, Revolutions, and Regressions in Latin American Feminist ICT Use. Elizabeth Jay

Recruiting Mothers: A Feminist Analysis of How Military

Motherhood is Defined by the Military and by Mothers Online. Wendy M. Christensen, University of Wisconsin-Madison

Discussant: France Winddance Twine, University of California-Santa Barbara

This panel explores the implications of participatory technologies for the expressions of feminism in a globally networked society. Do new technologies provide an opportunity for destabilizing existing hierarchies? Or, do old hierarchies of gender, sexuality and race persist in new media? As girls and self-identified women beyond the affluent Global North log on increasing numbers, are they using these new technologies to escape, redress, or affirm gender inequality? Are there ways that new technologies transform their material, corporeal lives? How are traditional boundaries of gender, sexuality, and race, reconfigured online? This panel brings together a number of feminist sociologists and other scholars to explore the meanings of new Internet technologies for the meaning of feminism(s) and virtual communities.

260. Thematic Session. Race, Class, Gender

Activism: Then and Now

Session Organizer and Presider: Jose Zapata Calderon, Pitzer College

Panel: Melanie Tervalon, PolicyLink

Yvonne Liu, Applied Research Center

Floyd Huen, Alameda County Medical Center

Hector Preciado, Greenlining Institute

Discussant: Jose Zapata Calderon, Pitzer College

Many new communities have developed out of social movements. The session deals specifically with communities that have developed out of social movements by populations confronting systems of oppression and domination. The session will include how the strategies in these communities have transformed over time.

261. Thematic Session. The Future of Community Organizing During an Obama Presidency

Session Organizer: John D. McCarthy, Pennsylvania State University

Presider: Edward T. Walker, University of Vermont

Panel: Steve Kest, ACORN

Gabe Gonzales, Center for Community Change

George Goehl, National People's Action

Kim Grose, PICO National Network

Matt Hammer, People Acting in Community Together - San Jose

Discussant: Spence Limbocker

Barack Obama's historic victory in the 2008 presidential election renewed the hopes of many for a restoration of community, civic engagement, and national service throughout the country. Throughout the campaign, there was much talk in the media about community organizing, especially given the new President's background as a South-Side Chicago community organizer. There was also significant discussion about community reinvestment and the sub-prime mortgage crisis, and the media controversy over community organizations' efforts to register voters. How do these issues and related assertions - by the campaigns, pundits, and party leaders - relate to the realities of modern-day community organizing? Also, how are the public policy initiatives of the new White House - such as those regarding health care, the housing foreclosure crisis, immigration, and financial regulation - influencing the work of local organizations? This panel will invite leading practitioners of community organizing into a dialogue with sociologists on the future of organizing and the role of the discipline in that future.

262. Thematic Session. The Impact of War: Community, Race and Gender

Session Organizer: Clarence Y.H. Lo, University of Missouri-Columbia

Panel: Yen Le Espiritu, University of California-San Diego

Joane Nagel, University of Kansas

Marnia Lazreg, Hunter College

Wars have decisively shaped the relations of gender and race in communities. Yen Le Espiritu draws insights from her research on the memories of war and the impact on families in the Vietnamese and Vietnamese-American communities. Marnia Lazreg examines the strategic role assigned to women in counter-subversive war doctrines implemented by the French military in Algeria and the USA in Iraq. Psychological, ideological, cultural, and political techniques were used to restructure the native family; re-socialize women into a new sexual order suited to the needs of men at war; and establish a war economy of scarcity fostering anxiety, uncertainty, and loss of identity. Joane Nagel discusses militarization as a masculinized strategy, and demonstrates its effects both on women's roles in the military in the Iraq War, and on the responses to climate change.

263. Special Session. Glancing Back, Looking Forward: Celebrating 35 Years of the Minority Fellowship Program (MFP)

Session Organizer: David T. Takeuchi, University of Washington

Presider: Patricia E. White, National Science Foundation

Panel: C. Matthew Snipp, Stanford University

Linda Burton, Duke University

Cedric Herring, University of Illinois-Chicago

Havidan Rodriguez, University of Delaware

Margaret May Chin, Hunter College

This session is a follow up to the MFP special session last year in Boston, where the very early days of MFP were celebrated in historical look back at the establishment of the program in the early 1970s and the circumstances leading up to it. This year, a distinguished panel of former MFP Fellows from different cohorts will discuss the contributions of MFP to the discipline at large, focusing on the diverse intellectual achievements, pipeline related efforts, and scholarly network development among former Fellows over 35 years. In doing so, they will provide a backdrop for how to consider the disciplinary impact of MFP as the program looks ahead to the future.

264. Author Meets Critics Session. Black on the Block: The Politics of Race and Class in the City (University of Chicago Press, 2008) by Mary E. Pattillo

Session Organizer: Margaret L. Andersen, University of Delaware

Presider: Carole C. Marks, University of Delaware

Critics: Mitchell Duneier, Princeton University/City University of New York

Mario Luis Small, University of Chicago

Sharon Zukin, City University of New York-Graduate Center/ Brooklynn College

Author: Mary E. Pattillo, Northwestern University

265. Regional Spotlight Session. Queer Organizing in the New Millennium

Session Organizer and Presider: Joshua Gamson, University of San Francisco

Panel: Eve Ilana Shapiro, Westfield State College

Kate Kendell, National Center for Lesbian Rights

Eric Stanley, University of California-Santa Cruz

Don Romesburg, Sonoma State University

The HIV/AIDS crisis set the agenda for much gay and lesbian organizing in the 1980s and 1990s. The purpose of this panel is to explore how GLBT organizing has shaped San Francisco in the new millennium. For example, how have transgender issues, "dyke marches," and other forms of social protest changed the sociological landscape? This panel will include the views of scholars and activists.

266. Professional Workshop. From Sociology Dissertation to Book

Session Organizers: Carolina Bank Munoz, City University of New York-Brooklyn College; Scott Andrew Melzer, Albion College

Co-Leaders: Naomi Schneider, University of California Press

Carolina Bank Munoz, City University of New York-Brooklyn

College; Miriam Greenberg, University of California-Santa Cruz;

Scott Andrew Melzer, Albion College

This workshop focuses on transforming a sociology dissertation into a book, with an emphasis on 1) writing a prospectus, 2) finding a publisher, 3) securing and negotiating a contract, and 4) editing and revising. The presenters will use their own experiences to discuss these processes, as well as how they relate to professional development. The session will include handouts on relevant topics and extended discussion with session participants. Please come with questions.

267. Research/Policy Workshop. Doing Feminist Research (co-sponsored with Sociologists for Women in Society)

Session Organizer: Joey Sprague, University of Kansas

Co-Leaders: Joey Sprague, University of Kansas

Shelley J. Correll, Stanford University

Jennifer L. Glass, University of Iowa

Judith D. Auerbach, San Francisco AIDS Foundation

The goal of this workshop is to help empower researchers who want to do work that are effective in informing feminist social change. Presenters will draw on their own experiences doing policy-related research and interacting with public outside of the academy to discuss the specific challenges and opportunities in this approach to sociological scholarship. Topics to be discussed include the ways policy-focused work prompts us to rethink our assumptions about knowledge and evidence, pushes us to be more intellectually honest and flexible, and engages us in the unique opportunities and challenges of working with stakeholders and the media. Attendees will participate in hands-on exercises to develop their skills.

268. Teaching Workshop. Using Collaborative Learning in the Hybrid Course

Session Organizer and Leader: Robyn White, Cuyahoga Community College

Explore ways to utilize collaborative learning techniques to enhance hybrid courses. This workshop will take a "Best Practices" approach. As such, audience participation is welcome.

293. Thematic Session. Communities of Faith, Immigration and Mobilization

Session Organizer and Presider: Gilbert R. Cadena, California State Polytechnic University-Pomona

The Catholic Church and the Struggle for Immigrant Rights. Luisa Laura Heredia, Harvard University Campus Sanctuary Movement and the Underground Railroad.

Gilbert R. Cadena, California State Polytechnic University-Pomona

Religion and Social Justice for Immigrants. Pierrette Hondagneu-Sotelo, University of Southern California

The panel examines how churches, religious networks and faith-based communities are involved in large scale mobilizing. In light of the anti-immigrant public and political rhetoric, progressive church sectors play an important role in fighting for the rights of immigrants. Panelists will highlight specific organizations and coalitions participating in the Sanctuary Movement of the 1980s, the New Sanctuary Movement of 2000s, and contemporary projects on the border. Church sectors and communities of faith are view as social change agents.

Session Organizers: Judith D. Auerbach, San Francisco AIDS

Foundation; Tasleem Juana Padamsee, Ohio State University

Presider: Judith D. Auerbach, San Francisco AIDS Foundation

Panel: Beth E. Schneider, University of California-Santa Barbara

Ricky N. Bluthenthal, California State University-Dominguez Hills

William W. Darrow, Florida International University

Samuel R. Friedman, National. Development Research Institute.

Lawrence J. Ouellet, University of Illinois-Chicago

San Francisco, New York, Chicago, and Miami were, and continue to be, some of the cities hardest hit by HIV/AIDS in the U.S. and globally. In each of these settings, the epidemic facilitated or forced local communities—particularly, but not limited to gay and lesbian communities—to develop significant political, scientific, and programmatic responses to it. Early on, these responses were community-driven and reactive for the most part, as people were dealing with a dire emergency with unknown characteristics. But, over time, science and organized advocacy caught up with and began to lead HIV/AIDS prevention, care, and treatment efforts, such that today, we see a combination of “home-grown” and “evidence-based” approaches to dealing with an ever-evolving phenomenon. From the beginning of the epidemic, sociologists have been involved in both the characterization of HIV/AIDS—at the individual, community, and societal levels—and the response to it, even while remaining somewhat marginalized among other HIV/AIDS researchers and funding agencies. This session will bring together individuals who were active from the earliest years of HIV/AIDS and those who are newer to it—as analysts and advocates in their communities.

The session format will be a moderated panel discussion. Following some introductory, framing remarks, panelists will respond to questions posed by the Moderator on the nexus of research, policy, and advocacy in the local response in which they have been part.

295. Thematic Session. Education: Whither the Common School?

Session Organizer: Maureen T. Hallinan, University of Notre Dame

Panel: Pamela Barnhouse Walters, Indiana University-

David F. Labaree, Stanford University

Orlando Patterson, Harvard University

Discussant: Anthony S. Bryk, Stanford University

The common school ideal stipulates that the purpose of public schools is to provide students with the knowledge and skills needed to promote the common good. To attain this end, public schools provide a common, comprehensive curriculum to insure equal educational opportunities for all students. In the twentieth century, the focus of public schooling shifted from the common good to an emphasis on individualism. Schools became seen as a gateway to occupational mobility and social status. As the public school system became more diversified, competition for scarce educational resources intensified. Efforts to deal with differences across students led to unequal educational opportunities. In order to reduce educational inequality and improve the quality of education for all students, numerous reforms have been undertaken. The most recent of these reforms is the No Child Left Behind (NCLB) legislation of 2002, requiring an extensive testing and accountability program. Reauthorization of NCLB will be considered in 2009. Evaluating this and other recent educational reforms raises a critical question. Are school reform efforts reinforcing the current individualistic orientation of public education or might persistent inequalities in educational outcomes return us to prioritizing equal educational opportunity and the common school ideal?

The Work of Global Justice. Fuyuki Kurasawa, York University

Activists around the world are drawing on the human rights frame and human rights documents such as the Universal Declaration of Human Rights developed in 1948 and other international human rights law and governance structures to support local and national struggles for citizenship and social justice. This panel will explore the diverse ways that human rights discourse and documents are used in different contexts and assess the effectiveness of these campaigns. Panelists draw on their research on economic development, ideologies of torture, religious fundamentalism, indigenous rights, and antipoverty campaigns to examine the intersections of human rights, globalization, sovereignty, community organizing, and national politics. They will consider how the divisions between civil and political rights and economic, social and cultural rights and between individuals and governments shaped understandings of human rights. How have these divisions been challenged? What are the limits of human rights framing for movements for social justice? What other frames and reconceptualizations of human rights are evident in contemporary struggles for the expansion of democratic citizenship and social justice?

297. Thematic Session. Workers, Managers, and Consumers: Triangles of Power in Work Communities

The Missing Customer and the Ever-present Market: Negotiating

Software Development Work. Sean O'Riain, National University of Ireland-Maynooth

Discussant: Steven H. Lopez, Ohio State University

The sociology of customer-oriented work is theoretically impoverished. Its two key concepts, "emotional labor" (Hochschild 1983) and "three-way interest alliances," (Leidner 1993) are a beginning but the field needs further compelling concepts and theoretical frameworks. The three contributors to this panel provide new important new ideas. Marek Korczynski advances a Weberian-informed view of service work organization as a customer-oriented bureaucracy which aims to "re-enchant" consumption through the creation of an enchanting myth of customer sovereignty. Sean O'Riain develops a framework for understanding how in many kinds of work situations the "missing customer" enters the shop floor via the "the market" - experienced as an abstract external force representing customers. Finally, Jeff Sallaz draws on his ethnography of casino work in the USA and South Africa in order to outline an innovative, "Bourdieuan" approach to the study of wage work.

involve participants throughout all stages of research projects. A more comprehensive approach than community-based or community-placed research, CBPR requires that all stakeholders in research projects—community members, representatives, and researchers alike—recognize one another's expertise as strengths, thus ensuring mutual respect and contributions before, during, and after a single public health study. Consequently, a CBPR study begins with a public health issue that the community identifies; community members work with researchers to combine knowledge, trust, communication, and action for social change to improve community health and to reduce health disparities. This workshop facilitated by the National Institutes of Health (NIH) presents current research community thought on CBPR approaches, discusses past and current NIH funding opportunity announcements (FOAs), and research projects from successful grantees. Participants will leave the workshop with an understanding of CBPR and NIH's commitment to the approach, how it resonates with NIH's priorities, and successful CBPR-based research studies.

299. Special Session. Developing a (Social) Science of Science and Innovation Policy

Profiles of Innovativeness and Gaps in the Idea Innovation Network. Jonathon E. Mote, University of Maryland-

Discussant: Jerald Hage, University of Maryland-
With heightened competitive pressures for innovation and science, policymakers around the world are seeking ways to configure institutional and organizational environments for scientific research that promote not only greater efficiency, but also boost scientific excellence and creativity. In 2007, the National Science Foundation, at the urging of the White House's Office of Science and Technology Policy (OSTP), initiated a new funding program entitled the Science of Science and Innovation Policy (SciSIP). Explicitly expanding beyond the dominance of economics in the policy arena, the program has funded a large number of projects that adopt much broader, and more sociologically-informed, approaches. In this panel, several of the SciSIP-funded projects report on initial findings and highlight the role that sociology can play in informing policy discussions.

300. Professional Workshop. Using your Sociology PhD to Succeed Beyond the Ivory Tower - Alternative Career Trajectories

Session Organizer and Leader: Susan Hayden Davis-Ali,

Panel: Margaret Weigers Vitullo, American Sociological Association

What can you do with a PhD in Sociology if you don't choose to go into academics? You might be surprised! This workshop focuses on the career paths of successful sociologists who took their PhDs into the non-academic world and found the core concepts of sociology (particularly race, class and gender) to be remarkably relevant. Learn ways you too can leverage your PhD in non-academic settings.

301. Research/Policy Workshop. Sociology and Policy: Applying Theory and Research to Public Policy

Session Organizer: Philip Nyden, Loyola University-Chicago

Co-Leaders: Philip Nyden, Loyola University-Chicago

Leslie H. Hossfeld, University of North Carolina-Wilmington

The workshop will focus on how sociology gets into play in the policy world. We will cover different types of research from basic research designed as "policy research" from the beginning to translational research that draws from existing sociological research to inform current policy questions. Topics to be covered include: the process of developing policy research projects; effective research design; work with non-academic community partners in the research process; use of the media in disseminating research; other avenues for getting research outcomes into the hands of policy movers and shakers. Examples of different types of successful projects will be presented, partially drawing from an ongoing project of the ASA Task Force on Institutionalizing Public Sociology.

302. Teaching Workshop. Teaching Environmental Sociology: Creative Approaches and Innovative Practices

Session Organizer: Jan E. Buhmann, Illinois College

Co-Leaders: Stephen M. Zavestoski, University of San Francisco; Beth Schaefer Caniglia, Oklahoma State University; Jan E. Buhmann, Illinois College

William R. Freudenburg, University of California-Santa Barbara

This interactive workshop will present a range of ideas, technologies, and innovations for engaging students in environmental sociology and environmental studies courses. Workshop participants will have an opportunity to learn about: how technology can be effectively utilized in these courses; how fieldwork and a focus on specific locations can help students become active participants in their own learning; and how environmental studies and environmental sociology can be taught from an interdisciplinary perspective. Participants will be invited to share their own successes and challenges in teaching these courses, and be provided with handouts that include ideas for exercises and websites useful in their own classes.

Immigrant communities have developed in new places and in new ways, and these new communities are inextricably linked with gender. This session includes papers that examine the ways that gender operates within interpersonal interactions, social institutions, and macro-structures to shape the experiences of international migrants and the communities that receive them. The papers also explore how gender interacts with religion, sexuality, politics and economics to shape gendered identities and practices within communities, both local and national.

Enabling Transnational Feminist Community. Paola Bacchetta, University of California-Berkeley

Ideas about community figure prominently in debates about women's empowerment in a global context. On the one hand, some argue that when women gain full individual rights within liberal democratic societies, they will gain political power that will elevate women as a group. This perspective often portrays women's traditional activities in community settings of family, racial/ethnic and religious groups as the site of women's oppression. In contrast, others point to the necessity of empowering the communities in which women are situated as a route toward elevating the status of women. What seems to be at stake are competing notions of gender and politics that have troubled the historical divide between public and private, between state and neighborhood, and the need to rethink the multiple ways that women create, are controlled by, and utilize community for political empowerment. This session focuses on women's placement within these competing frameworks to assess multiple routes to women's empowerment. Panelists will examine how ideas about community figure into different theories of women's empowerment. By emphasizing women's empowerment in non-U.S. settings, the session creates space for new ways of thinking about the significance of community.

332. Thematic Session. From Total Institutions to the Community: Reentry Transitions in Context

 Session Organizer and Presider: Stephanie W. Hartwell, University of Massachusetts-Boston

Panel: Andrea M. Leverentz, University of Massachusetts-Boston

Lior Gideon, John Jay College

David S. Kirk, University of Maryland-

Stephen Metraux, University of Sciences in Philadelphia

Virginia Aldige, North Carolina State University

As more and more individuals are returning to the community from total institutions, the experience of their return and that of the receiving community is worthy of sociological exploration. In this session we focus on the transition from correctional custody to the community from multiple points of view using the organizing framework of the geographical community. This framework highlights the variant dilemmas of reentry from sociological perspectives including neighborhood receptivity, resources, and social policies that intersect with ex-inmate characteristics including race, class, gender, homelessness, mental illness, and criminal and substance abuse histories suggesting that reentry and community reintegration are shaped by the features and possibilities of the community.* *Each participant's paper examines reentry from the perspective of the geographical community and highlights features of the receiving community including public policy responses to ex-inmates, and neighborhood perceptions, characteristics and resources.

333. Thematic Session. Global Racial Stratification

Session Organizer: Augustin Lao-Montes, University of Massachusetts-Amherst

Panel: Augustin Lao-Montes, University of Massachusetts-Amherst

Denise Ferreira da Silva, University of California-San Diego

Mark Q. Sawyer, University of California-Los Angeles

Howard Winant, University of California-Santa Barbara

Arguably, "Race" and Racism are not secondary but primary relations in modern definitions of the self and processes of power (including the capitalist world-economy, states, and cultural formations). In light of this, the study of racial stratification is key to understand global inequalities as well as the possibilities for democracy. This panel will discuss different ways of analyzing global racial stratification, its historical foundations and its present dynamics, and the historical efforts and current possibilities for anti-racist politics. A number of important scholars within this endeavor that we name as a "world-historical sociology of racial formations, racism, and racial politics will be part of the discussion.

334. Thematic Session. The New Politics of Religious Communities: Managing Diversity and Inequality

Establishing an 'Ethnic' Christianity: The Challenges Facing the Marthoma Indian Church in the United States. Prema Ann Kurien, Syracuse University

Discussant: R. Stephen Warner, University of Illinois-Chicago

Religious organizations have often been touted as one institutional site where divisions of age, gender, class, race, and sexuality should be overcome - and religiously based organizations have assumed a variety of political roles in the contemporary social landscape. The thematic session will explore efforts to bridge racial, class, and sexuality divisions within religious organizations, as well as the new types of political action that are engaging different types of religious groups and coalitions. It has great relevance to the sociological study of religion, politics, and community and to the potential shape of our public sphere.

335. Special Session. Methodological Strategies and Studying Intersectionality

Session Organizers: Adia M. Harvey Wingfield, Georgia State University; Enobong Hannah Branch, University of Massachusetts-Amherst

Presider: Patricia A Banks, Mount Holyoke

Panel: Joya Misra, University of Massachusetts-Griff Tester, Georgia State University

Christine L. Williams, University of Texas-Austin

Rose Brewer, University of Minnesota-

Discussant: Mary Romero, Arizona State University

This invited session addresses the issues, challenges, and options that accompany using an intersectional perspective. Despite growing recognition that intersectionality is a useful theoretical tool, many sociologists still struggle with the process of determining opportune and methodologically rigorous ways to apply this framework to their scholarship. This session features a panel discussion from sociologists who have used intersectional theory to drive qualitative, quantitative, policy analysis, and/or theoretically driven work. Among other things, panelists will discuss ways to draw attention to overcoming the gap between the relatively widespread appreciation of the theory and its lesser use in practice, as well as the challenges that accompany using an intersectional perspective, and the extent to which intersectionality is legitimized or constrained through avenues for scholarship.

Peter Olney, International Longshore Warehouse Union

The year 2009 will mark the 75th anniversary of the 1934 San Francisco longshore and general strike, one of the single most significant events in the history of the U.S. labor movement. This panel focuses on the legacies of the strike and its implications for the future of the US labor movement.

338. Didactic Seminar. Strategies for Getting Your Work into the Media Eye, and Translating Sociological Concepts Once They are Looking Hilton San Francisco, Franciscan B, Ballroom Level

Session Organizer and Leader: Dalton Conley, New York University

In the spirit of C. Wright Mills, sociologists have lots to say on the issues of the day, and the op-ed pages are a good place to say it. The op-ed page is among the most read parts of the newspaper both in print and on-line. In particular, elites such as business leaders, government officials and scholars tend to read and circulate op-eds. Op-eds also attract the attention of television producers, book agents, and policy makers. They form an important part of national debate. In this vein, this seminar is designed to: Help you identify the core ideas, theories and research that emerge from your work and the work of others; frame a persuasive argument that is pegged to a topical "issue of the day"; do it all in 800 words or fewer; and submit it in a way that maximizes chances for successful placement. Participants are asked to prepare in advance a draft research-based op-ed that will be examined, critiqued, and rewritten as part of the seminar. Participants will receive a background tip sheet on good practices to aid them with their pre-class first draft.

339. Professional Workshop. Winning Small Grants for "Cutting Edge" Sociological Research and Related Activities: The ASA Fund for the Advancement of the Discipline Hilton San Francisco, Lombard Room, Sixth Floor

Session Organizer: Roberta M. Spalter-Roth, American Sociological Association

Panel: Alexes Harris, University of Washington
Isaac W. Martin, University of California-San Diego
Ronica Nicole Rooks, University of Colorado-Denver
Zulema Valdez, Texas A&M University

The American Sociological Association's Fund for the Advancement of the Discipline (FAD) provides small awards up to $7,000 for ground-breaking research initiatives and related activities such as conferences. FAD is made possible through a matching grant to ASA from the National Science Foundation and administered by the ASA. The FAD PI will give an overview of the program. Four recent award recipients and the program director will discuss the following issues. What are the chances of winning? What kinds of proposals get funded? What makes research "cutting edge" and significant for sociology as a field? How do you emphasize the scientific, social and educational impact of the proposal? How do you deal with suggestions and criticisms if you are going to revise and resubmit? The purpose of this workshop is to encourage applications, especially from scholars in the early stages of their careers and who are not necessarily in "top 10" departments. Panelists will speak from their experiences and workshop participants will be encouraged to discuss proposal ideas.

340. Research/Policy Workshop. Using Technology and Remote Access Data Enclaves to Study Businesses, Entrepreneurship and Innovation Hilton San Francisco, Van Ness, Sixth Floor

Session Organizer and Leader: Julia Lane, National Science Foundation

The study of businesses, entrepreneurship and innovation lies at the core of understanding the demand side of the labor market, as well as the process of wealth creation. Yet such study has been limited by lack of access to confidential business data. However, new technology and new data dissemination protocols are being developed. Remote access approaches use modern computer science technology, together with researcher certification and screening, to promote access while at the same time protecting confidentiality. The NORC data enclave has taken the remote access approach one step further. It recognizes that a remote access environment also permits the development of an environment that allows the sharing of information about data in the same fashion as that adopted by the physical and biological sciences, namely creating virtual organizations. (Foster, Kesselman, & Tuecke, 2001; Pang, 2001). Tools such as the Grid, MySpace, and Second Life have changed how people congregate, collaborate, and communicate: the NORC enclave offers social scientists the same opportunities. Promoting virtual collaboration not only serves the function of ensuring the generalizability and replicability of work that is fundamental to high quality research, but also promotes a healthy interaction between data collectors, data producers and data users. In particular, the NORC enclave allows multiple people on a team access to the data, and team members are set up with individual workspaces that are complemented by team workspaces. Each workspace allows the user to save their result sets and related notes. NORC supports the ongoing collaborative annotation of data analysis and results through wikis and blogs and discussion spaces. There is also a group portal environment that enables the collaborative development of research deliverables such as journal articles. This workshop provides an introduction to the NORC data enclave and the datasets within the enclave. It also features presentations by international scholars, which describe how remote access has been successfully implemented in Germany and the United Kingdom, as well as a presentation describing how confidential tax data could be used to study innovation in such a setting.

In what ways do micro level social psychological processes reproduce or lessen macro level patterns of stratification by race, ethnicity, gender and class? How can social psychological concepts and theories broaden our understanding of social stratification processes? The goal of this session is to promote a better understanding of the relationship between social psychology and social stratification by bringing together scholars who work in these two areas. Panelists will discuss the interplay between social psychology and stratification in their own research, highlighting the role of social psychological processes in understanding stratification in different social institutions and arenas.

362. Section on Sociology of Culture Invited Session. The Future of Cultural Sociology: A Conversation

Session Organizer: Karen A. Cerulo, Rutgers University

Presider: Andrew J. Perrin, University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill

Panel: Karen A. Cerulo, Rutgers University

Joshua Gamson, University of San Francisco

Karin D. Knorr Cetina, University of Chicago

Ann Mische, Rutgers University

Jeffrey Olick, University of Virginia

Michael Schudson, University of California-San Diego

Viviana A. Zelizer, Princeton University

In this session, we have assembled a number of scholars who study culture from varied perspectives. Led by discussion leader Andy Perrin, these individuals will reflect on the future of culture as a sociological area of study, including participants' ideas on the most productive areas for forthcoming research.

Power as Institutional Work: Academic Authority and the Third World Strike. Fabio Rojas, Indiana University

Discussant: Anna-Maria Marshall, University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign

This panel will feature papers that examine the relationships among elections, legal institutions, and the potential for social change. How have federal laws and rights consciousness, as well as state and local legal institutions, shaped voting practices, constrained or facilitated expanding the electoral map, protected the franchise, or influenced other aspects of electoral dynamics and outcomes? How have other developments in contemporary society, such as social protest, social inequality, waves of immigration, new forms of electronic surveillance and accountability, and/or social policies influenced legal institutions and rights consciousness as they relate to elections?

Discussant: Bernice A. Pescosolido, Indiana University

The mainstream media regularly reports sensational stories about the latest trends in health - including "epidemics" of obesity, autism, and teenage depression. Are these characterizations fact or fiction? Are these health crises "real" or social constructions? This panel brings together a panel of experts to discuss the prevalence, patterns, and meaning of four public health issues: ADHD (Attention-Deficit/Hyperactivity Disorder), autism, depression, and suicide.

365. Section on Sociology of Population Invited Session. Marriage in the Millennium: Papers Honoring Steve Nock's Scholarship (co-sponsored by the Section on Sociology of the Family)

Discussant: Paul R. Amato, Pennsylvania State University-University Park

This session focuses on themes that were central to Steve Nock's research agenda, with a focus on marriage, divorce, and cohabitation. The four papers deal with the role of marriage in men's lives, relationship quality among married and cohabiting individuals, contrasting cultural models of divorce, and the link between age at marriage and marital success. The presenters are individuals at different stages of professional development who were influenced in multiple ways by Steve Nock's work. The research presented in this session is evidence of Steve Nock's continuing contributions to family sociology and demography.

368. Plenary Session. Bringing Communities Back In: Setting a New Policy Agenda

Panel: Bernice A. Pescosolido, Indiana University

Robert J. Sampson, Harvard University

Steven L. Gortmaker, Harvard University

This session examines how making the concept of community more central to sociological thinking might catalyze new avenues of investigation for public policy. Because the construct of community assumes that the social networks that people experience are crucial to their individual beliefs and actions, bringing multifaceted ideas about community into public policy debates might catalyze more effective ways of addressing recognized social problems. This session asks four prominent social scientists consider how analyses of social networks and communities might affect their areas of expertise. The focus of the session is on areas of public policy where incorporating ideas about community might have a major impact on that area.

The Politics of Engendering Census Counts. Harriet B. Presser, University of Maryland-College Park

Anticipating the 2010 U.S. Census, this session examines how politics of counting populations is central to the social construction of communities. Political factors affect all aspects of research design, from the types of questions asked, the types data collected, how data is interpreted, and policy implications that might ensue. Yet these processes typically receive minimal attention in research that assumes that processes of counting are politically neutral. Using their expertise in areas of race, gender, sexuality and ethnicity as a touchstone for analysis, presenters will explore issues such as, how the processes of counting or measuring populations define the communities that most concern them; how these processes can foster heightened visibility of some communities as well as an underemphasis on others; and how notions of who is worth counting reflects ideas of researchers about race, sexuality, immigrant status, gender, and class.

370. Thematic Session. Contradictions in Service Learning and Community-based Research Parc 55 Hotel, Cyril Magnin I, Level Three

Session Organizers: Randy Stoecker, University of Wisconsin-Madison; Jose Zapata Calderon, Pitzer College

Presiders: Randy Stoecker, University of Wisconsin-Madison; Jose Zapata Calderon, Pitzer College

Panel: Randy Stoecker, University of Wisconsin-Madison
Philip Nyden, Loyola University Chicago

Rose Brewer, University of Minnesota-Minneapolis

For more than a decade, there has been much written and said about the great service that universities have been providing to educate communities through service learning and community-based research. Nevertheless, an ugly underside is beginning to emerge of academics building their careers and students building their resumes with little success to show in reversing the ravages of disinvestment. This panel will explore the contradictions of academy-based service learning and civic engagement as part of considering whether it is living up to its rhetoric.

371. Thematic Session. Disability, Politics, and Community: Conceptual Issues

Session Organizer: Richard K. Scotch, University of Texas-Dallas

Presider: Sharon N. Barnartt, Gallaudet University

Panel: Allison C. Carey, Shippensburg University

Valerie R. Leiter, Simmons College

J. Gary Linn, Tennessee State University

Richard K. Scotch, University of Texas-Dallas

Discussant: Barbara M. Altman, Disability Statistics Consultant

Issues involving community are at the center of much recent sociological work on disability, including questions of how disability community and culture are created and shaped by social institutions that stigmatize, segregate, and marginalize individuals with disabilities as well as by resistance to those institutional forces; the consequences of service provision in community-based settings instead of medicalized and segregated health, education, and rehabilitation facilities; the implications of the demographics of disability, which can cross traditional community lines, but where the prevalence of many disabling conditions are concentrated within other oppressed communities of color, class, and gender; how disability communities are affected by recent demographic and economic changes which may further marginalize people with disabilities, and by emerging technologies that may help to bring people with disabilities together more easily. This session will feature presentations on the politics of disability and community from both established and emerging sociologists of disability.

372. Thematic Session. New Communities, New Intelligences: Revising and "De-Biasing" Standardized Testing for Minorities, Women, and the Working Class

Session Organizer: Howard F. Taylor, Princeton University

Panel: Joshua Aronson, New York University

Angel Luis Harris, Princeton University

Meredith Phillips, University of California-Los Angeles

Jane R. Mercer

Current standardized ability tests show a persistent score gap for Whites versus minorities of color, middle versus working class persons, and men versus women on the quantitative sections. The predictive validity of the tests is also less for minorities, working class, and women. Are the dimensions of "cognitive ability" similar, or different, across these groups and are recent "multidimensional" approaches to ability relevant? The panel addresses these issues and other related issues.

373. Thematic Session. Racialization of Sports

Session Organizer and Presider: Ben Carrington, University of Texas-Austin

Panel: Scott N. Brooks, University of California-Riverside

Douglas Hartmann, University of Minnesota-Minneapolis

Reuben A. Buford May, Texas A M University

Discussant: Grant Farred, Cornell University

Sport continues to be an important sociological site for the construction and performance of racialized masculinities. This session examines the racial morality tales that continue to be told through the hyper-mediated lives of black male athletes to the forms of everyday struggle, resistance and accommodation to the racial order found within recreational sporting cultures and institutions. Thus the session presents new theoretical positions concerning the changing and complex relationships of race, sport and gender.

of the western hemisphere, Oceania, and parts of Asia—seemed destined for extinction. By the early twentieth century these groups were dwindling in numbers, powerless, economically marginal, targets for racial hatred, undergoing rapid cultural change, and ravaged by alcohol and disease. Urbanization seemed to hasten and exacerbate these changes. In the second half of the 20th century, a remarkable development took place. Most of these groups ceased to decline in number, many of them experienced spectacular population growth, and around the world, a large number organized to solve problems in their communities, press their claims for self-government, and demand redress for past injustices. This session is devoted to resurgent indigeneity and will address a variety of issues related to the revival of Native communities and indigenous rights.

Activist scholars and community activists in California have led the nation's efforts to dismantle the prison industrial complex. The central questions for this panel are: What is the role of public sociology and how have sociologists used their work to combat mass incarceration? How can alliances between activist scholars, community activists and people in prison reshape our understandings of community?

378. Departmental Workshop. Initiating and Reviving Master's Programs (co-sponsored by the ASA Task Force on the Master's Degree in Sociology)

Session Organizer: Carole L. Seyfrit, Radford University

Co-Leaders: Mellisa Katharine Holtzman, Ball State University

Carole L. Seyfrit, Radford University

Robert K. Shelly, Ohio University

James Sherohman, Saint Cloud State University

Roberta M. Spalter-Roth, American Sociological Association

James A. Wilson, Russell Sage Foundation

The master's degree is the fastest growing graduate degree in the U.S., but sociology has not participated in this growth to the same extent as other social sciences. This workshop presents data on awarded master's degrees in sociology; key issues to consider in implementing, modifying, and maintaining the master's; what we know about master's students; and a discussion of case studies of successful master's programs. The session will encourage questions and discussion among participants.

379. Professional Workshop. The Rhetoric and Reality of Being an Applied Sociologist

Session Organizer: Joshua S. Meisel, Humboldt State University

Co-Leaders: Christine H. Morton, Stanford University

Sabrina S Arredondo

Judith K. Little, Humboldt State University

The education literature is replete with accounts of disconnect between what students learn in the academy and what they encounter in the field. For sociologists who decide to pursue careers doing applied sociological work, there are ongoing tensions over identity, voice, professional development and politics, and disciplinary connections as well as the practical challenges of running a business for those who become consultants. The purpose of this professional workshop is to provide a forum in which workshop leaders and participants can share their experiences doing applied sociological work. Workshop leaders come from an array of work settings as applied sociologists: the academy, private consulting, the public sector, and nonprofit organizations. Participants will become familiar with the challenges and rewards of applied sociological work as well as share strategies for overcoming the tensions identified.

380. Research/Policy Workshop. Interdisciplinary Standards for Qualitative Research (based on workshops conducted by the Sociology program at NSF and research funded by the program)

Colin Elman, Syracuse University

The Sociology, Law and Social Science, Political Science and Cultural Anthropology Programs in the Directorate for Social, Behavioral and Economic Sciences (SBE) at the National Science Foundation convened a workshop in 2005 on Interdisciplinary Standards for Systematic Qualitative Research. The workshop convened a group of sociologists, anthropologists, political scientists, and law and social science scholars who articulated the standards their respective disciplines use in developing and assessing the merits of disciplinary and interdisciplinary research projects that use qualitative methods and techniques. Presenters will discuss these standards and their implications for both the design and evaluation of interdisciplinary research that meets the requirements for funding considerations at the National Science Foundation. The format is interactive, allowing audience participation.

381. Teaching Workshop. Teaching About Global Climate Change through a Wide Variety of Sociology Courses

Session Organizer: Kari Marie Norgaard, Whitman College

Co-Leaders: Kari Marie Norgaard, Whitman College

Barbara Sutton, State University of New York-Albany

Panel: Penelope Canan, University of Central Florida

Global climate change is an enormous ecological problem with widespread social implications. The changing climate influences numerous aspects of social life: through intensifying climatic events (hurricanes and drought), accelerating the spread of contagious diseases and invasive species, generating new patterns of international migration, or inducing additional forms of economic and social conflict. Climate change exacerbates existing social inequality, affects political opportunities, changes community and family structures and more. As sociologists we know that the poor and people of color will bear a disproportionate brunt of climate change both in the U.S. and abroad. Climate change is remaking the ecological and social worlds simultaneously, yet for most people, the impacts of climate change are currently invisible. We lack the needed sociological imagination to see the connections between climate change and daily life. We will share resources for teaching about climate change in sociology courses ranging from social movements and environmental sociology, to Introduction to Sociology, Social Problems, Gender, an Race and Ethnic relations, and beyond. We begin by describing the significance of climate change to these different sub-disciplines and then share sample syllabi, useful texts and articles, films, radio clips, teaching scenarios and assignments. We will also introduce participants to web resources, including the resources available on the ASA Environment and Technology website. The workshop will be interactive. Participants are invited to share their own stories and ask questions.

Five papers addressed the effect of the content or type of tie on the evolution of network structure. Lewis and Kaufman use facebook data to revisit Omar Lizardo's thesis of the correspondence between strong and weak ties with high and low culture. Valery Yakubovich addresses the same question from a different theoretical perspective, the use of human capital in the creation of social ties, also using facebook data. Jason Greenberg explores how variations in the content of ties - along the parameters of excludability and rivalry - affect the evolution of network structure. Nak Choi models the process by which the ideologies of different think tanks affect the relationship between research institutions through the use of affiliated researchers. And Lazer et al. look at the reciprocal effects of ideology and network affiliation.

Gender & Power in Global Perspective: A Forum on the Work of Raewyn Connell
Parc 55 Hotel, Mission 1, Level Four

Session Organizer and Presider: Michael A. Messner, University of Southern California

Panel: Joan R. Acker, University of Oregon
Patricia Yancey Martin, Florida State University
Raka Ray, University of California-Berkeley

Critic: Raewyn Connell, University of Sydney

For more than two decades, the work of Australian sociologist Raewyn Connell has been at the forefront of gender scholarship. Drawing from her own empirical work and that of others, Connell introduced concepts that capture gender's multiplicity and dynamism in life histories, institutional gender regimes and societal gender orders. In recent years, Connell has turned her attention to examining dynamics of the global gender order. In this session, a distinguished group of invited gender scholars will take Connell's work as a point of departure for discussing their own strategies for thinking about gender and power in global or transnational perspective.

412. Thematic Session. Commerce, Creativity, and Community in the Digital Age

Session Organizer and President: Eric Klinenberg, New York University

Panel: Craig Calhoun, Social Science Research Council

Danah Boyd, Microsoft Corporation

Fred Turner, Stanford University

Siva Vaidhyanathan, University of Virginia

The Internet provides fertile terrain for developing creative communities, and in recent years artists, intellectuals, and activists have experimented with new techniques for circulating work online. This panel explores the possibilities for open exchange generated by emergent creative networks in media, academia, and the entertainment field, as well the threats to “free culture” related to regimes of intellectual property law and trends in media ownership.

413. Thematic Session. Community Colleges and the Reconstruction of Civic Life

Session Organizer and President: David L. Levinson, Norwalk Community College

Panel: Carol A. Jenkins, Glendale Community College - ARIZONA

Vanessa Morest, Norwalk Community College

Kevin J. Dougherty, Columbia University

Katherine R. Rowell, Sinclair Community College

Discussant: David L. Levinson, Norwalk Community College

There is a growing body of empirical research on how community colleges serve as gateways and at times gatekeepers for immigrants, minorities, and working class students wishing to attain the proficiencies needed to succeed in a global, knowledge based 21st century version of the American Dream. The majority of minorities, immigrants and working class students enter higher education through community colleges but it is unlikely that they will graduate or succeed in transferring to a baccalaureate institution. While this conundrum has caused much consternation, recent policy proposals and practices have been advanced to enable community colleges to move from sites of reproduction to social mobility. Sociologists who are community college practitioners and researchers studying reproduction and mobility will be brought together on this panel to explore these issues.

414. Thematic Session. Education in Diverse Communities

Session Organizer and President: Prudence L. Carter, Stanford University

Panel: Prudence L. Carter, Stanford University

Linda Darling-Hammond, Stanford University

Goodwin Liu, University of California-Berkeley

Roslyn A. Mickelson, University of North Carolina-Charlotte

Jennie Oakes, University of California-Los Angeles

In this era of “testocracy”—when testing and accountability standards dictate the success of schoolchildren—we must continue to ask what approaches are effective in reducing the “opportunity gaps” among children of various social backgrounds. Over time, one mechanism for achieving equity among students has been to achieve racial and ethnic balance in schools. Recent Supreme Court decisions, however, have mandated that educators and policymakers rethink how they achieve equity through desegregation. A panel of illustrious scholars and researchers will address some of the critical issues facing communities and the impact on diverse students’ academic and social well-beings, as their schools and communities seek to adhere to judicial and legislative orders.

415. Thematic Session. Emergent Communities of Care

Session Organizers: Anita I. Garey, University of Connecticut; Karen V. Hansen, Brandeis University

President: Karen V. Hansen, Brandeis University

Divergent Orbits of Care and Experiences of Growing Up in Contemporary Oakland. Barrie Thorne, University of California-Berkeley

Who Are You: The Liminal Status of Friendship in Caregiving.

Margaret K. Nelson, Middlebury College

Eden and the Promise of Renewal: Caring for Self and Community through Gardening. Pierrette Hondagneu-Sotelo, University of Southern California

Who's Got Your Back: Caring Communities in Iraq among Reserve Soldiers. Susan M. Ross, Lycoming College; Michael Musheno, San Francisco State University

Discussant: Anita I. Garey, University of Connecticut

When social institutions, such as families, the military, schools, and neighborhoods, fail to incorporate needed care into their structure, the people who constitute those institutions often construct their own communities of care. The papers in this thematic session explore communities of care that emerge within, along with, around, in the absence of, or in spite of formal institutions. In dialogue with each other, they pay particular attention to the crossing of social borders in creating those connections.

416. Thematic Session. The Global Umma: The Imagined Community of Radical Islam

Session Organizer: Albert J. Bergesen, University of Arizona

Presider: Omar A. Lizardo, University of Notre Dame

Panel: Valentine M. Moghadam, Purdue University

Immanuel Wallerstein, Yale University

Charles Kurzman, University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill

Albert J. Bergesen, University of Arizona

The global umma, the global community of believers, is a form of real and imagined community around which many have participated in SMO's, politics, and terrorist violence to try and bring it into political being. While sociology continues to study the political communities of race, ethnicity, gender, sexuality, nation-state and diaspora, it also needs to examine the Islamist ideal of a global umma, and so it is the goal of this panel to analyze the political, religious, and movement implications of this idea and its potential reality.

417. Author Meets Critics Session. ASA Rose Series' Beyond the Boycott: Labor Rights, Human Rights and Transnational Activism (Russell Sage Foundation, 2007) by Gay W. Seidman

Session Organizer: Gilda Zwerman, State University of New York

Presider: Michael Kimmel, State University of New York-Stony Brook

Critics: Ruth Milkman, Univ of California-Los Angeles

David Vogel, University of California-Berkeley

Beverly Silver, Johns Hopkins University

Author: Gay W. Seidman, University of Wisconsin-Madison

Described as "imaginative" and "thought-provoking" by reviewers, Beyond the Boycott vividly depicts contemporary efforts to humanize globalization, by focusing on three campaigns in which labor activists successfully used the threat of consumer boycotts to pressure companies to accept voluntarily codes of conduct and independent monitoring of work sites. Her analysis explores both the ingredients of campaign success and the inherent limitations of voluntary monitoring schemes. The book received an honorable mention from the ASA Section on Labor and Labor Movements in 2008.

418. Regional Spotlight Session. Same Sex Marriage in California

Session Organizer and Presider: Anna Muraco, Loyola Marymount University

Panel: Judith Stacey, New York University

Adam Fingerhut, Loyola Marymount University

Melanie Heath, McMaster University

Discussant: Jodi O'Brien, Seattle University

Mayor, Gavin Newsom, along with many community based organizations, has made San Francisco a center of the firestorm surrounding same sex marriage. Many of the political strategies and sociological implications are born and felt immediately in San Francisco.

419. Departmental Workshop. Career and Family Trajectories and Work Life Policy

Session Organizers: Roberta M. Spalter-Roth, American Sociological Association; Linda Grant, University of Georgia

Co-Leaders: Kimberly Kelly, University of Georgia

Heather Macpherson Parrott, University of Georgia

Erin Leah Winter, University of Georgia

Nicole M. Van Vooren, American Sociological Association

In this workshop we will draw upon quantitative and qualitative data from the ASA-sponsored Ph.D. + 10 project to explore work and personal life dilemmas faced by sociologists working in academic and nonacademic positions. We present several "case studies" of sociologists who have encountered conflicts between work and personal life and explore potential resolutions of conflicts from multiple perspectives: departments, universities, the discipline, and individuals. Some of the dilemmas that we find recurring in the interviews that we conducted include: An unplanned pregnancy in the first semester at a new job. A complicated pregnancy that requires an unexpected interruption of work (e.g., an order for bed rest) Persistent unemployment or underemployment of a spouse or partner Geographical transfer of a spouse or partner's job The need to arrange a flexible-time leave when a child is adopted rather than born to a sociologist (since arrival dates for an adopted child are uncertain). A request to take on new, heavy responsibilities when one has young children and heavy care commitments The chronic illness of a child or a spouse that affects work commitments. A need to take on carework responsibilities for a critically ill parent Participants will be asked to discuss what difficulties did this pose for the individual, for coworkers, for departments and for universities and what possible solutions could be devised.

420. Professional Workshop. Sociologists as Organizational Consultants: Tips and Techniques for Getting Started (co-sponsored with the Section on Sociological Practice and Public Sociology)

Session Organizer: Kathy Shepherd Stolley, Virginia Wesleyan College

Co-Leaders: Kathy Shepherd Stolley, Virginia Wesleyan College

Kathryn Goldman Schuyler, Alliant International University

This interactive workshop introduces organizational consulting for sociologists. The content focuses on several basic questions. What do organizational consultants do? How can sociologists re-focus from the classroom into consulting roles, including the transition from academic teaching to practical training? How can sociologists present and market their specific perspective and expertise to prospective clients? How can the sociological perspective contribute to building healthy organizations? This workshop serves as a companion session with the "Using Sociology to Foster Healthy Workplaces" workshop that extends the examination of the fourth question in both depth and direction.

421. Research/Policy Workshop. Partnerships Between Social Justice Organizations, Funders, and Researchers

Session Organizer: Jessica Fields, San Francisco State University

Co-Leaders: Hector Carrillo, San Francisco State University

Jessica Fields, San Francisco State University

Rogério Pinto, Columbia University

This interactive workshop will examine partnerships among social justice and social service organizations, funders, and sociological (social science researchers?) researchers. In recent years, these partnerships have been more explicitly conceptualized as "collaborations" that respond to calls for public sociology, strong links between social and medical research and social policy, and research models that recognize and build on the assets of vulnerable populations. Workshop facilitators bring experience in social and health promotion service provision, community-based, participatory, and action research that has received federal, state, university, and foundation funding. Our research has found audiences in local, national, and international arenas. Drawing on that experience, facilitators will examine strategies, challenges, and successes in partnering with multiple organizations, attaining funding, implementing, and disseminating collaborative research. We will provide a theoretically and empirically grounded conceptualization of "research collaboration." We will consider methodological concerns as researchers adapt their study to address the needs of social justice organizations and funders. We will also examine concerns with research ethics and integrity as researchers strive to meet the standards of their own disciplines and institutions as well as those of their collaborators. Finally, we will consider everyday practices that promote collaboration among funding, community-based and research partners all working toward social justice. Workshop participants will have ample opportunities to share their own experiences in collaborative research.

422. Teaching Workshop. Teaching Introductory Sociology for the First Time

Session Organizer: Matthew Oware, DePauw University

Co-Leaders: Nancy A. Greenwood, Indiana University Kokomo

Jay R. Howard, Indiana Univ/Purdue Univ Columbus

Teaching Introductory Sociology for the first time need not be a difficult or overwhelming task. Our aim is to bring to the new instructor lessons from the literature on the scholarship of teaching and learning about the possible content and pedagogies for this class. We will look at introductory sociology and how it functions as a course in the undergraduate general education core, as a diversity course, and as an introduction to the major. We will also discuss course design, choosing course goals, textbook selection, syllabus construction, styles of teaching and learning, assessment of learning outcomes, as well as class management techniques. We will offer examples of exercises and assignments as well as checklists and a bibliography of useful resources. Participants should bring questions or issues they want to discuss to the workshop.

Organizational Perspectives on Neighborhood Effects: What Standard Experimental Studies Have Neglected. Mario Luis Small, University of Chicago

Macro-, Micro-, and Meso-level Factors in Organizational Identity Dynamics. Victoria Johnson, University of Michigan-Ann Arbor
Discussant: Walter W. Powell, Stanford University

The session highlights new research that is being done in the area of Organizational Theory. Each author brings a new perspective to the understanding of organizational behavior which both builds on earlier work and adds a new dimension to the study of organizational behavior and the relationship between organizations and their environment. Jason Owen-Smith examines the intersection of institutions and networks. Institutions and networks can be profitably linked by attending to the role physical space and proximity play in organizational life. Katherine Kellogg uses ethnographic data and social movement theory to explore how, why, and when less powerful members inside organizations collectively challenge those more powerful to change work practices that disadvantage them. Mario Small argues that research on neighborhood effects has paid scant attention to routine organizations such as childcare centers and churches. An alternative approach to both organizational density and networks changes our understanding of both neighborhood poverty and the relation between organizations and their environments. Victoria Johnson draws on the case of recent "greening" initiatives at U.S. botanical gardens to examine how organizations' historical (cultural, economic, and political) contexts influence the process through which social movements generate organizational and field-level change.

 Discussant: David John Frank, University of California-Irvine
 This session features papers that examine the interrelationships between law and social institutions (including states, economic forms, the family, religion, sexualities) in comparative and global contexts. Papers focus on legal institutions, the effects of law on institutions, and the way global and regional institutional contexts shape the development, interpretation or implementation of law. For the purposes of this session, "law" is defined broadly to include not only official law but also other manifestations of legality, such as rights consciousness or ideas about the "rule" of law.

Sessions

450. Thematic Session. Activism and Community/Residential Neighborhood Organizing Hilton San Francisco, Plaza A, Lobby Level

Session Organizer: Gilda Laura Ochoa, Pomona College

Panel: Shawn A Ginwright, Santa Clara University

Latino Faith-based NGOs in New York City: Affirming Community and Identity Formations. Milagros Peña, University of Florida
El Pueblo Unido...: Immigrant Organizing and U.S. Nationalism.

Monisha Das Gupta, University of Hawaii-Manoa

Discussant: Linda Trinh Vo, University of California-Irvine

This session centers on the multiple factors impacting communities and the creative ways that local, transnational, labor, and racial/ethnic communities are resisting, mobilizing, and working toward social, economic, and political justice. This panel features interdisciplinary scholars in Women's Studies, Africana Studies, Asian American Studies, and Ethnic Studies.

451. Thematic Session. Altruistic Cooperation in Communities, Evolutionary and Contemporary Parc 55 Hotel, Cyril Magnin I, Level Three

Session Organizer and Presider: Clarence Y.H. Lo, University of Missouri-Columbia

A Cooperative Species. Herbert Gintis, Santa Fe Institute and Central European University

A Relational Species. Michael W. Macy, Cornell University

Queerer than We Thought: Late Pleistocene Human Societies. Peter

Richerson, University of California-Davis

Discussant: Karen S. Cook, Stanford University

Thinking about the fundamentals of "community," Herbert Gintis and co-author Samuel Bowles have inquired into the historical evolution of human cooperation. Cross-cultural evidence points to the importance of what they call "strong reciprocity" and the willingness to be fair and contribute to society. These traits are crucial in the formation and sustaining of communities, and are selected for, over time, by moral individuals enforcing "altruistic punishment" for the benefit of the entire group. Gintis argues that cooperative groups tend to be successful and prevail over the long run. Richerson examines the evolutionary side of the argument, and Kollock will draw on his own research on cooperation in new internet communities to comment on Bowles and Gintis's work. Cook extends the discussion to contribute to a theory of contemporary cooperative institutions.

452. Thematic Session. Constructing Communities across International Borders Hilton San Francisco, Franciscan A, Ballroom Level

Session Organizer: Cecilia Menjivar, Arizona State University

Panel: Irene H.I. Bloemraad, University of California-Berkeley

Rhacel Salazar Parrenas, Brown University

David Fitzgerald, University of California-San Diego

Robert Courtney Smith, City University of New York-Baruch College/Graduate Center

This panel examines the different types of communities—broadly speaking—that are created in the context of international migration by looking at three factors that impinge on community formation—development of social capital, moral categorizations and moral control, and exclusivist immigration policies—in different regions of the world and at different points in time, and using various methods of data collection.

453. Thematic Session. HIV/AIDS: Transforming Politics, Transforming Communities Hilton San Francisco, Continental Parlor 8, Ballroom Level

Session Organizers: Anne W. Esacove, Muhlenberg College; Tasleem Juana Padamsee, Ohio State University

Presider: Christie A Sennott, University of Colorado-Boulder

Competition or Collaboration? The Community of Female Sex Workers in China in the Era of AIDS. Susanne Yukping Choi, Chinese University of Hong Kong

Global AIDS Prevention Policy and Cultural Mediators: Creating Identity, Stifling Transformation. Anne W. Esacove, Muhlenberg College

Drug User Activism, HIV/AIDS, and the Dialectics of Community Response. Samuel R. Friedman, National Development Research Institute

One Class at a Time: Transforming the Student Body through HIV Community Work in the Deep South. Bronwen Lichtenstein, University of Alabama

Discussant: Tasleem Juana Padamsee, Ohio State University

Over the past quarter century, the social history of HIV/AIDS has been fundamentally shaped by the activities and decisions of communities around the world. Conversely, the disease itself and responses to it have both created new communities and shifted the meaning and activities of existing communities. Presenters on this panel will focus on the mutual constitution of communities, the HIV/AIDS epidemic, and transformative politics at local, national, and international scales.

454. Departmental Workshop. Integrating Ethics in the Sociology Curriculum

Session Organizer: Earl Babbie, Chapman University

Co-Leaders: Earl Babbie, Chapman University

Thomas L. Van Valey, Western Michigan University

Presentation by the ASA Task Force on Integrating Ethics in the Curriculum. Will demonstrate web resources developed by the Task Force and will engage the audience in a discussion of problems and possibilities for teaching ethics.

455. Professional Workshop. Opportunities and Obstacles for Faculty Development at Community Colleges

Session Organizer and Leader: Philip C. Dolce, Bergen Community College

Panel: Carol A. Jenkins, Glendale Community College-Arizona

Susan J. St. John-Jarvis, State University of New York-Corning

Community College

David L. Levinson, Norwalk Community College

Wava G. Haney, University of Wisconsin Colleges

An interactive workshop focused on the opportunities and obstacles for faculty professional development at community colleges. The results of an original survey conducted at a number of community colleges throughout the nation dealing with this issue will be discussed. The workshop will explore criteria used to define faculty development; its role in promotion and tenure considerations; strategies for including it in faculty evaluation plans; and the responsibilities faculty association, administration and professional organizations have in fostering professional development.

456. Teaching Workshop. Teaching about Family Violence

Session Organizer and Leader: Barbara R. Keating, Minnesota State University-Mankato

Overcoming Challenges in Teaching About Sexual Violence. Debra Guckenheimer, University of California-Santa Barbara

Strategies for Teaching about Interpersonal Violence and Child Abuse. Nancy A. Greenwood, Indiana University-Kokomo

Avoiding the Perception of Male-Bashing in Teaching Feminist Approaches to Family Violence. Vicki L. Hunter, Minnesota State University

Teaching about Gender and Violence. Laurel E. Westbrook, Grand Valley State University

This workshop will identify and offer strategies for addressing the special issues and challenges in teaching courses on family and gender violence. The panel includes discussion on international perspectives and feminist theories of violence. The workshop includes both panel presentations and audience participation.

Discussant: Howard S. Becker

A fundamental challenge for all social scientists is the relationship between theory and data. The four papers in this session provide challenges, examples and explorations of ways in which we take on this challenge through qualitative and quantitative data collection and analysis. The researchers suggest new ways of approaching this relationship, problems with some of our typical approaches and examples of "best practices."

- Where does Reputational Power in Organizations Come From? Alona Labun and Rafael P.M. Wittek, University of Groningen; Christian Steglich, ICS; Rudi Wielers, University of Groningen / ICS

Several papers concerned with elaborating the concept of status, theoretically and empirically. Bothner and Godart propose a refined definition of status and support their definition with empirical examples. Lynn, Podolny, and Tao model the process through which status and quality are decoupled. Edward Bishop Smith explores the horizontal/group quality of social status while Labun et al. identifies horizontal mechanisms that affect perceptions of power and status within firms. Smith and Faris explore the dynamics of adolescent status hierarchies.

Discussant: Thomas Ponniah, Harvard University

The election of Barack Obama was an important milestone in 3 ways beginning with his being the Afro-American president in US history. Secondly, his election as a Democrat is a further repudiation of George Bush and the Republican agenda. Finally, he assumes the presidency when the country is facing its worst economic crisis in 80 year. How and why was he elected, was the role of race, racism and sexism in his election. How will race impact the policies and agendas of his administration, will he forge new directions, or does he legitimate a fundamentally racist society and make it seem "color blind" insofar as he is African American, yet most of his policies are centrist and little different from what would have been a Clinton administration.

476. Section on Sex and Gender Paper Session. Gender, Bodies, and Health: Negotiating and Contesting the "Healthy" Body

In this session, panelists will present papers on community based research and public sociology in local community settings. Papers will focus on practical uses of sociology to promote community change. Panelists may discuss research or public action designed to involve local communities in social change efforts. Change may be considered in terms of local policy, community organizing, programs to address social problems, public practices such as mobilizing the populace around elections, and other areas. Please consider both the theoretical grounding of your research or practice, and the ways your work draws on the fields of sociological practice and public sociology

480. Thematic Session. Building Communities of Teachers, Learners and Researchers Using Web 2.0 Tools

Session Organizer and Presider: Caroline Hodges Persell, New York University

Panel: Andrew A. Beveridge, City University of New York-Queens College and Graduate Center

Joshua Radinsky, University of Illinois-Chicago

Christopher Uggen, University of Minnesota-Minneapolis

Amelia Cotton Corl, University of Minnesota-Minneapolis

Margaret Weigers Vitullo, American Sociological Association

Caroline Hodges Persell, New York University

The panelists are developing and using new Web 2.0 digital approaches to sharing and discussing ideas, data, and teaching resources, including Social Explorer, the Contexts WebCrawler, an ASA Digital Library of Teaching and Learning Resources, and a website of interactive resources for teaching Introduction to Sociology. Using these varied digital communication technologies as a springboard, they will reflect on the strengths and limitations of such resources for constructing cross-generational communities of teachers, learners, and researchers. They will also consider the implications of such resources for the control and definition of knowledge, discuss larger issues of technology and learning communities, and examine such questions as: (1) Do generational differences exist in the use of technology, especially with respect to constructing communities? If so, what are the implications of such differences for building teaching and learning communities? (2) Are there ways to integrate the rapidly growing on-line communities that are in heavy use by students (and some faculty), e.g. Facebook, MySpace, YouTube, Second Life, blogs, and the like) into teaching and research? (3) How do these new digital resources differ from traditional ways of building teaching and learning communities? (4) What features of these new forms of digital communication help or inhibit the creation and sustenance of learning communities that cut across social roles and institutional locations? How and why do they do so? (5) Are there any unintended consequences or pitfalls to using these types of resources? If so, what might they be and how might they be addressed? (6) Are there other issues involved in the use of these digital communication technologies that need to be considered?

482. Thematic Session. Portable Communities

Session Organizer and Presider: Rebecca G. Adams, University of North Carolina-Greensboro

Panel: Rebecca G. Adams, University of North Carolina-Greensboro

Marcelo Frediani, Paris VIII - Vincennes

Robert O. Gardner, Linfield College

James D. Wright, University of Central Florida

The researchers on this panel will discuss portable communities.

Although this term has been used to refer to virtual communities (i.e., in which an individual can participate wherever he or she is in physical space), here the term refers to communities that physically move from place to place. This type of community is in fact becoming quite common; people who travel around the country in recreational vehicles, academics who attend professional conferences, business people who frequent trade shows, dog and horse show enthusiasts, storm chasers, and some music fans are all examples. In today's society we often have little in common with our neighbors and sometimes work no longer gives people a sense of belonging, and therefore it is not surprising that groups of people have taken advantage of the opportunities afforded by modern communications and transportation technology to form and maintain relationships with like-minded people not necessarily living near them. Although some of the resulting communities are not territorial at all (i.e., they exist purely in Cyberspace) or form periodically in the same physical space (e.g., Burning Man, the Oregon Country Fair), the members of portable communities come together intermittently in a sequence of temporarily shared spaces.

483. Thematic Session. The New Politics of Community: Urban Social Control in Comparative Perspective

Borders, Migrations, and Insecurity: A Materialist Critique.

Alessandro De Giorgi, San Jose State University

Whose Security?—The Case of Settled, but Unauthorized,

Immigrants. Doris Marie Provine, Arizona State University

This panel will focus on the ways in which the social, legal and political boundaries that define community are being re-drawn in the post 9/11 context in cities around the globe. The premise of the panel is that the intensification of transnational migration flows in the context of the war on terror has fueled both national and local efforts to delineate and police communal boundaries, often with important consequences for constitutional democracy. Papers will explore how the law, architectural forms, surveillance technologies, and other social control mechanisms are being mobilized to define and enforce the line between insider and outsider at the local level. Particular attention will be paid to the impact of concerns about terrorism and security on debates around community, as well as the intersection and convergence of immigration policy and criminal justice institutions in this historical context. Although individual papers may focus on developments in particular urban areas, the discussant will endeavor to identify both similarities and differences that span municipalities.

484. Author Meets Critics Session. Won't You Be My Neighbor: Race, Class, and Residence in Los Angeles (Russell Sage, 2009) by Camille Zubrinsky Charles

Session Organizer: Nancy A. Denton, State University of New York-Albany

Presenter: Maria Krysan, University of Illinois-Chicago

485. Professional Workshop: The Next Generation of MFP Scholarship in Service to Social Justice.

Session Organizer: Jean H. Shin, American Sociological Association

Leader: Anthony Ryan Hatch, University of Maryland-College Park

Panel: Marcus Anthony Hunter, Northwestern University

Sabrina Akbar Alimahomed, University of California-Riverside

Michael Juan Chavez, University of California-Riverside

Brianne Davila, University of California-Santa Barbara

Kimberly R. Huyser, University of Texas-Austin

This workshop is geared toward graduate and undergraduate students, focused on how to integrate sociological scholarship with interests in serving social justice, broadly defined. An important piece of the historic U.S. presidential election was a reorganization and resurgence of youth activism, and current and former MFP Fellows will speak on the election as a defining moment in the future of studying disparities within various subareas. There will be ample opportunity to hear from audience members about their own research areas and how they might fit into the development of intellectual leadership that has been a hallmark of the Minority Fellowship Program.

486. Research/Policy Workshop. Human Rights Cities (co-sponsored with Sociologists without Borders)

Session Organizer and Leader: Judith Blau, University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill

Human rights are enshrined in international laws and state constitutions, and they also are the /raison d'être/ of social and political movements, as well as of hundreds of thousands of nongovernmental organizations around the world. Yet for human rights to become embedded in practices and everyday norms, people in communities need to engage human rights and apply these principles to government, social institutions, and economic practices. Several cities in the United States have embarked on this process and sociologists have played key roles. This workshop will draw from their experiences and they will discuss the challenges, setbacks and progress. This workshop exemplifies American sociology at its very best because those involved in these processes are putting sociological tools to work in an area that has never been chartered.

487. Teaching Workshop. Teaching Quantitative Literacy in Introduction to Sociology

Session Organizer: William H. Frey, Brookings Institution

Co-Leaders: William H. Frey, Brookings Institution

Jill Bouma, Berea College

Dana Greene, North Carolina Central University

Katherine R. Rowell, Sinclair Community College

Stephen A. Sweet, Ithaca College

John Paul DeWitt, University of Michigan-Ann Arbor

This workshop will introduce teachers to tools and approaches toward integrating "hands on" data analysis into lower level undergraduate courses. It will feature resources available with the Social Science Data Analysis Network (www.SSDAN.net) from the University of Michigan's Population Studies Center and from the Online Learning Center at the Inter-university Consortium of Political and Social Research. The former makes available new data from the Census Bureau's American Community Survey while the latter provides teaching resources from several ICPSR surveys. Participants will learn about how to use the resources and adopt them in their courses. They will also be given information on how to become part of a network of faculty who will share data, classroom exercises and experiences with quantitative reasoning. Materials will be provided to assist adoption.

While feminist research on the connections between gender ideologies and state regulation enjoys a long and complex history, only in recent years have scholars looked systematically at the ways in which sexuality, sexual norms and heteronormativity interact with and reinforce modern statehood. The papers in this session interrogate connections between popular and scientific concepts of gender and sexuality, and the practical ways states use them to make policy, and to make citizens.

Discussant: Nina Eliasoph, University Southern California

This session explores the participatory and political potential of new technologies of civic engagement. Can virtual communities expand opportunities for collective organization and mobilization if they are privately controlled? Does engagement online lead to mobilization offline? Is the content of online deliberations different in tone and structure from that in conventional forums? Where, when, and how does online political participation impact offline politics and regulation of the internet? Scholars of political culture will compare insights on the differential impacts of political participation enacted online, from online deliberations with and without connections to public policy-making, to political campaigns negotiation of social networking sites and Youtube.

Prior to the 1980s homelessness had come to be regarded as a social problem anachronism in first-world developed cities such as New York, Los Angeles, Paris, London, and Tokyo, while remaining a persistent condition in third-world and developing countries and cities. Today, however, we know all too well that that perception, like the one-time popular linear developmental perspective on cities and societies, is itself an erroneous sociological relic, as homelessness not only surfaced in U.S. and other first-world cities in the 1980s but still persists. This session assembles a diverse panel of research and policy experts on homelessness in the U.S. and elsewhere to discuss a pre-arranged set of questions regarding, for example, the emergence and persistence of the current wave of homelessness, community responses to it, community and national variations, recommended solutions, and future projections.

514. Thematic Session. Productive Democracy Hilton San Francisco, Continental Parlor 8, Ballroom Level

Session Organizer and Presider: Erik Olin Wright, University of Wisconsin-Madison

Panel: Joel Rogers, University of Wisconsin-Madison

Discussants: Lane Kenworthy, University of Arizona

Fred Block, University of California-Davis

Frances Fox Piven, City University of New York-Graduate Center

This session explores concrete visions of a more egalitarian capitalism. It departs from Joel Rogers' "productive democracy," a synthetic effort to state the key governing principles and institutions of such an order. Productive democracy premises the continued existence of market capitalism, scarcity, scaled complex economies, and internationalization. Like social democracy, it is egalitarian in its ensured social wage and the distribution of opportunity. But it puts more emphasis on early-in-life redistribution and widely shared ownership. It also emphasizes throughout the distinctive capacity of a well-ordered democracy for learning, innovation, and sustained productivity advance. This capacity resides in democracy's ability (common to any political authority) to solve cooperation problems and its superior ability (as a democratic authority that accords citizens equal respect) to elicit citizen trust, the revelation of local information, and voluntary contribution in problem solving. Productive democracy would make the development of this capacity — and its exercise in both collective action and individual citizen participation — a defining theme in politics and governance. In popular politics, it would assert democracy as a force of production and learning that adds value (not just values) to the economy, increases (not only redistributes) the social surplus, and thereby widens the future scope of democratic choice. In program and governance, productive democracy would aim at building and improving a "productive infrastructure" that both increased this surplus and enlarged democracy's role in its creation — a group of complementary public or quasi-public goods that improved the quality and organization of the economy's basic factor conditions; added value and reduced waste in economic activity; supported decentralized citizen involvement in discharging public tasks, problem solving, and experiment; and directed new learning from experiment back to broader arenas of public deliberation. In foreign policy, productive democracy would aim at equalizing national capacity for such essentially autonomous democratic deliberation. It would support an international framework of legal right, share their enforcement costs with others, and contribute to a common basket of global public goods. But it would aim at sustainable human development over integration, and generalizing the conditions needed for local democratic decisions about how that was best achieved.

515. Thematic Session. Revitalizing Indian Country: Assessing the Social Impact of Economic Development, Gaming, and Tribal Self-government in the Era of Self-determination

Discussant: Eva Marie Garrouette, Boston College

Since 1970, self-determination ushered in a new era of Native empowerment that led to a series of efforts designed to enhance the economic and political power of American Indian and Alaska Native communities. Among these initiatives, casino gaming is the most visible and most controversial but other tribes have launched successful ventures in other industries including manufacturing, tourism, and agriculture. At the same time, other reservations have enjoyed little success and remain social and economic backwaters plagued by poverty, substance abuse, domestic violence, and other social problems. Over the past 20 years, the internal stratification of Native American communities has increased dramatically and with this change, there have been profound changes within Native America as well as between American Indian and Alaska Native communities and neighboring non-Native communities. This session will be to examine the changing social position of American Indians within the larger context of American society.

The "body" has been brought into sharp relief through feminist and queer theoretical and empirical investigations of how different bodies are valued according to their gender, social class, age, religion, racial ethnic, and national status. In this way, the body is conceptualized as a site of power, control, and resistance. Issues of the body addressed in contemporary feminist and queer scholarship include the extent to which the body functions of a site of knowing. What knowledges come into view when the body is denaturalized? How does attention to desire, embodiment, reproduction, sex, hunger, and pain offer new ways to understand the relationship between gender, race, class, sexuality and other differences?

At the ASA meetings in New York City in 2007, panelists discussing academic freedom at a Presidential Panel on Academic Freedom Under Attack spent some time telling the audience about the trials of teaching as a sociologist (particularly a liberal sociologist) in a time when your lectures might end up on YouTube and your reading list in the National Review; a time when such publicity can and does lead to restrictions on academic freedom for some academics. At the same time, young academics still in graduate school are sometimes taught that media exposure will detract from their reputations as serious scholars. As one reported attending the panel on academic freedom put it, these fears have lead some academics to be so reluctant to answer reporters' calls that they surrender the dialogue to the other side. Yet in 2009, ASA will return to San Francisco, the same location from which Michael Burawoy in 2004 ushered in the era of public sociology. Many sociologists thus want to find ways to get their research and their message out there in the press, but have not had the opportunity to learn how to do so in a way that will minimize the possibility of being misquoted and maximize their impact. This workshop seeks to provide such tools by presenting a variety of perspectives from journalists and public sociologists with extensive media exposure in an interactive format that will help sociologists learn to work well with the media. and the student results. We discuss the salience of news awareness for effective liberal education that leads to civic awareness and engagement as well as global awareness. We conclude with some ideas for teaching about the news in sociology. The audience will gain knowledge of their own news awareness as well as understanding of students' news awareness. They will also learn about how to teach using the news.

The Role of Technology in College Dating Violence. Lisa Griepentroph Melander, University of Nebraska-Lincoln

What's Race Got to Do with It? Black versus Latino Violence in School. Sonia Oliva, University of Illinois-Chicago

Discussant: Tanya A. Nieri, University of California-Riverside

This session includes three papers on school violence, both high school and university level settings. The first paper analyzes national survey data and addresses the relation between school violence and academic achievement, examining whether this relation is moderated by ethnicity. The second paper reports the results of focus groups, identifying themes about the use of technology (e.g., text messaging, social networking websites) to perpetrate psychological aggression in college dating relationships. The final paper is an ethnographic study of a high school in Chicago that examines violence involving Blacks and Latinos. The issue addressed is whether such violence is "racially motivated" or the product of larger social forces.

524. Regular Session. Sociology of the Body II: Body Theory and EthnographyHilton San Francisco, Union Square 22, Fourth Floor

The Social Consequences of Body Capital: the Boxing Gym as Microcosm. Elise Paradis, Stanford University

Discussant: Lisa Blackman, University of London

The papers in this session examine theoretical foundations of the sociology of the body and embodiment and build upon this work with criticism and ethnographic and qualitative research. Boxing, on-line anorexia communities and prosthetic limbs are among the specific topics covered, but all of the papers contribute to broader issues in the sociology of embodiment.

Income, Poverty and Income Inequality: Individual and Area Effects on Voluntary Association Membership in Canada. Laura Duncan, McMaster University

Discussant: Philip N. Cohen, University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill

Both antecedents and consequences of social class depend on the larger societal context. These papers identify regional and national factors that determine the size and even the direction of how stratification position is related to a variety of micro-level characteristics: work hours, voluntary memberships, schooling, and parental backgrounds.

Discussant: Ashley Wood Doane, University of Hartford

The college and university class of 2012 (entering in September 2008)

was born in 1990. This cohort has come of age in an era where color-blind ideology has dominated the U.S. social landscape and institutional racism has often taken on more subtle forms. For millennials, even racial events of the 1990s such as the Rodney King beating, the LAPD trial and the subsequent riots, and the OJ Simpson trial, are historical episodes that predate their social awareness. The political consciousness of Millennials as been shaped by such events as the aftermath of September 11, 2001, the Iraq War, the debate over "illegal" immigration, and the celebration of the first black major-party candidate for President of the United States.

At the same time, the last of the "Civil Rights Generation"—those old enough to have participated in the Movement—is transitioning out of the academy. Under these circumstances, how do we teach race and ethnicity inequality to a cohort who has been told that race no longer matters in American society? What paradigm are we passing on and how do we engage students to challenge their lived experience and sociocultural assumptions?

Discussant: Barry Wellman, University of Toronto

Social scientists are increasingly using the Internet as a source of information about human behavior and social structures. New tools make it possible to study trends in searches, to count publications, do content analysis, and to study links among individuals and organization. Virtual worlds like Second Life can be used laboratories for experiments and for studying how socio-cultural interaction in these virtual worlds may be similar to or different from other virtual and real social realities. Scientists and humanists are using virtual worlds to constitute research projects and organizations. And scholar-activists are organizing global social movements within virtual worlds that do both the politics of the virtual worlds and that are having impacts on the real world. This session brings social scientists together to tell about the techniques and the contents of research that uses the Internet and to discuss theoretical and methodical issues.

Panel: Boaventura de Sousa Santos, University of Coimbra

Lisa Hajar, University of California-Santa Barbara

Global civil society is suggested to carry the possibility for further democratization, transparency, accountability and social cohesion in a global level. However, it would be a mistake to portray global civil society as the panacea that it is often made out to be. First, global civil society suffers from a significant inequality of representation. Second, global civil society not only entails actors promoting pluralism and liberalism, but also those advancing religious and ethnic fundamentalism, and even ultra-nationalism. In this context, this session is going to address the following three key questions: What, when and where is global civil society? What have been its promises and limitations over the past two decades, and what are its prospects for the immediate future? What should be the crucial issues that theory should tackle as we further assess the meaning of global civil society?

544. Professional Workshop. Using Sociology to Foster Healthy Workplaces

Session Organizer: Kathryn Goldman Schuyler, Alliant International University

Co-Leaders: Kathy Shepherd Stolley, Virginia Wesleyan College

Russ Newman, Alliant International University

Carl Mack, Alliant International University

Kathryn Goldman Schuyler, Alliant International University

This workshop shows how the behavioral sciences foster healthier organizations. The leaders are consultants and administrators who will share their experiences of building healthier workplaces. They will interact with the audience on topics such as how a professional organization like the ASA might promote organizational health (looking at what the APA has done in recent years), how interpersonal dynamics impact organizational health, how members of a university community can address a major societal issue (like homelessness) in a way that makes the university healthier, how military organizations address these issues, and what is required if organizational change efforts in this area are to have lasting impact. This workshop serves as a companion session to the workshop on "Sociologists as Organizational Consultants: Tips and Techniques for Getting Started". Participants can expect lively interaction and a chance to ask about anything connected with organizational health.

These papers share link and identify mechanisms driving structural evolution. Shin-Kap Han employs an exceptional dataset from the March First movement to identify key mechanisms in the construction of a collective action network. Damon Centola uses computational modeling to examine homophily and consolidation in boundary maintenance and the construction of social cohesion. Eric Johnson uses historical data on US pastors to link vacancy chains with integration processes. Gondal and MacLean, again using historical data, identify microprocesses responsible for economic integration in early modern Florence. And, Manturak looks at the type of ties responsible for the spread of behavior within groups - in this case dieting among teenagers.

With globalization, issues exceed the territory of a state and its sovereignty over dealing with issues is increasingly threatened. Global warming and large-scale international migration pose such problems. To deal with such problems, other levels of sovereignty, global (UN), regional (such as EU) and sub-national (such as California), are playing increasing roles. Under such conditions, treating the national state as the logical unit for cross-national comparison may not get at the factors important to certain research questions, such as the reasons why states and other organizational actors set and succeed at goals and policies. Papers in this session will examine the interplay of levels in establishing the behavior of states and national populations, and discuss the methodological implications for future studies using cross-national comparison.

The recent resurgence in awareness about religion in public life is enriching and diversifying sociological conversations about religion and spirituality. These developments are expanding the tools that sociologists use to critically evaluate the role of religion in modern societies. This session will not only highlight new substantive directions but also bring a broader range of sociologists into dialogue about how and where we study religion, help build scholar networks, and develop the momentum and means to continue the conversation.

Research Funding Opportunities and Data Resources

Organizers: Karina J. Havrilla and Nicole Van Vooren, American Sociological Association

Sunday, August 9, 2009, 1:00 – 4:00 pm

Hilton San Francisco, Yosemite Hall

This poster/exhibit session provides a unique occasion to meet representatives of major research funding institutions and principal investigators, researchers, and managers of large-scale datasets that are publicly available for use. Each display by a funding institution provides a visual overview of research funding and the application process, materials for distribution, and time for direct individual discussion. Data resource representatives are available to talk about the featured datasets, their analytic potential, and issues relating to access and use, including state-of-the-art Internet services to access datasets. This is an opportunity for meeting attendees to learn about these datasets and their potential for research and teaching. All meeting participants, including students, are encouraged to attend.

1. Sociology Program

National Science Foundation

Presenter(s): Patricia White, Jan Stets; 4201 Wilson Boulevard, Arlington, VA 22230; phone: 703-292-8762; fax: 703-292-9195; email: pwhite@nsf.gov; jstets@nsf.gov; homepage: www.nsf.gov/funding/pgm_summ.jsp?pims_id=5369&org=SES&from=home

The Sociology Program at the National Science Foundation (NSF) supports basic research on all forms of human social organization -- societies, institutions, groups and demography -- and processes of individual and institutional change. The Program encourages theoretically focused empirical investigations aimed at improving the explanation of fundamental social processes. Included is research on organizations and organizational behavior, population dynamics, social movements, social groups, labor force participation, stratification and mobility, family, social networks, socialization, gender roles, and the sociology of science and technology. The Program supports both original data collections and secondary data analysis that use the full range of quantitative and qualitative methodological tools. Theoretically grounded projects that offer methodological innovations and improvements for data collection and analysis are also welcomed. The Sociology Program also funds doctoral dissertation research to defray direct costs associated with conducting research, for example, dataset acquisition, additional statistical or methodological training, meeting with scholars associated with original datasets, and fieldwork away from the student's home campus.

The Program resides in NSF's Division of Social and Economic Sciences. The Division supports disciplinary and interdisciplinary research, data collection, and studies to improve measurements and methods. Its goal is to develop basic scientific knowledge of social, behavioral and economic systems, organizations and institutions, and human interaction and decision-making. It also provides support for research conferences, doctoral dissertation project, international group travel, and the development data resources and infrastructure.

2. Fellowship Support for Sociologists

American Sociological Association

Presenter(s): Roberta Spalter-Roth, Nicole Van Vooren, Janene Scelza; 1430 K St, NW, Suite 600, Washington, DC 20005; phone: 202-383-9005; fax: 202-638-0882; email: research@asanet.org; homepage: www.asanet.org

The American Sociological Association (ASA) provides funding to its members through several small awards and fellowship programs. These include the Fund for the Advancement of the Discipline small awards program, Teaching Endowment grants, and the Spivack fellowship program for applied and policy research.

The ASA and the National Science Foundation jointly support the Fund for the Advancement for the Discipline (FAD). The goal of FAD is to nurture the development of scientific knowledge by funding ground breaking research initiatives and other scientific research activities. FAD provides support (up to $7,000) for substantive and methodological breakthroughs that can advance knowledge and lead to the acquisition of additional research funds. Awards are limited to individuals with PhD degrees or the equivalent.

ASA provides awards (up to $1,000) through its Teaching Endowment Small Grants Program to support projects that extend the quality of teaching in the United States and Canada. Individuals, departments, and a program or committee of a state or regional association are eligible to apply.

Through its Sydney S. Spivack Program in Applied Social Research and Social Policy, ASA supports a Congressional Fellowship and Community Action Research Fellowships. The ASA Congressional Fellowship provides PhD level sociologists with in-depth experience as a staff member of a Congressional Committee or in a Congressional Office or agency. The Community Action Research Fellowships provide support up to $2,500 for sociological work with community organizations, local public interest groups, or community action projects.

3. Minority Fellowship Program American Sociological Association

Presenter(s): Jean Shin, Karina Havrilla; 1430 K St, NW Suite 600, Washington, DC 20005; phone: 202-383-9005; fax: 202-638-0882; email: minority.affairs@asanet.org; homepage: www.asanet.org

The ASA Minority Fellowship Program (MFP) has existed since 1974 and just celebrated its 35th anniversary year (and cohort of trainees) with special events and sessions in both Boston and San Francisco. For the 2010-2011 MFP Fellowship year, MFP is generously supported by annual contributions from Alpha Kappa Delta, Sociologists for Women in Society, the Midwest Sociological Society, the Association of Black Sociologists, the Southwestern Sociological Association, and numerous individual ASA members. MFP applicants can be new or continuing graduate students in sociology, who are enrolled in a program that grants the Ph.D. Applicants must be members of an underrepresented minority group in the U.S. (e.g. Blacks/African-Americans, Hispanics/Latinos, Asians or Pacific Islanders, or American Indians/Alaska Natives).

Applicants must also be U.S. citizens, non-citizen nationals of the U.S., or have been lawfully admitted to the U.S. for permanent residence. Application deadline is January 31; notifications are made by April 30. Fellowship is awarded for 12 months and typically renewable for up to 3 years in total. Tuition and fees are arranged with the home department. MFP Fellows are selected each year by the MFP Advisory Panel, a rotating, appointed group of scholars in sociology.

4. Population Studies Center and ICPSR University of Michigan

Presenter(s): John P. DeWitt, Suzanne Hodge, Lynette F. Hoelter; PO Box 1248, Ann Arbor, MI 48106-1248; phone: 734-615-5653; fax: 734-647-8700; email: jpdewitt@umich.edu; shodge@umich.edu; lhoelter@umich.edu

The new Quantitative Social Science Digital Library (QSSDL) will promote quantitative literacy by helping instructors to use real data in classes. The goal is to infuse quantitative reasoning throughout the social science curriculum and to bridge the gap between substantive courses and classes in methodology and statistics. Two key components of the developing pathway are the Social Science Data Analysis Network and the Online Learning Center at the Inter-university Consortium for Political and Social Research. Both of these resources provide data extracts, online analysis tools, student exercises, and other materials that help instructors integrate data from the census, opinion polls, and advanced social science surveys in their courses. The QSSDL project will provide comprehensive links to these materials and other resources promoting quantitative literacy, such as teaching modules, social science data sources, applications for statistics and mapping, and research on teaching and learning. Teaching materials will be linked to the Pedagogy in Action service at the Science Education Resource Center at Carleton College, allowing instructors to learn more about a particular pedagogical approach or topic. Faculty will be able to easily search through materials in a variety of ways to find activities or ideas that fit their own teaching style and interests. A goal of later stages in the development of the QSSDL will be to provide faculty with tools to easily create teaching modules for their students and share them with others. The primary audience for the project will be students and faculty in disciplines such as sociology, political science, economics, geography, and social psychology. The poster describes these aims, presents illustrative teaching materials, and introduces the partners in the QSSDL project.

5. ICPSR University of Michigan

Presenter(s): Lynette F. Hoelter, Suzanne Hodge; PO Box 1248, Ann Arbor, MI 48106-1248; phone: 734-615-5653; fax: 734-647-8700; email: lhoelter@umich.edu, shodge@umich.edu; homepage: www.icpsr.umich.edu/OLC

The social sciences are well suited to including quantitative elements throughout the curriculum but doing so can mean challenges in preparation and presentation of material for instructors and increased student anxiety. This poster describes the ICPSR Online Learning Center (OLC), a tool created to alleviate some of the barriers of using data in the classroom. The OLC is a source of empirical activities aimed at undergraduates in lower-division, substantive courses.

The core of the site is made up of activities that instructors can pull out for student use either through demonstration in the classroom or by having students access the website directly. These guides match major sociological and methods/statistics topics to ICPSR datasets and teach the concepts through basic data analysis using the online Survey Documentation and Analysis (SDA) software. Concepts chosen for inclusion are common across textbooks typically used for introductory courses. Students do not need to learn any statistical software to be able to complete the exercises – everything is accessible online. Each exercise is set up like a lesson plan, including a goal statement/learning objective; brief discussion of the concept and how it is used in sociology; short description of the dataset – accompanied by a link to the full dataset, should the instructor or student want to do further analyses on his/her own; an analytic application that addresses some question(s) related to the concept; notes about interpreting the results; and a bibliography of additional resources.

The exercises make use of data from the ICPSR holdings – anything from the Multi-City Study of Urban Inequality, 500 Families study, or Japanese General Social Survey might be used for a guide. The analyses are tested and simplified by collapsing categories on variables with many values and defining “non answers” as missing as appropriate, so as to make visual presentation and interpretation easier. Students are also given assistance in interpreting results for the focal questions of the exercise. This resource will get students working with data in the first classes in the discipline and strengthen both quantitative literacy and the understanding that the field of sociology involves the use of research and evidence

6. Commission on Professionals in Science and Technology

Presenter(s): Lisa Frehill; 1200 New York Ave, NW, Suite 113, Washington, DC 20005; phone: 202-326-7080; fax: 202-842-1603; email: lfrehill@cpst.org; homepage: www.cpst.org

The Commission on Professionals in Science and Technology collects, synthesizes, analyzes and publishes reliable information about the U.S. science, technology, engineering and mathematics (STEM) workforce. CPST also serves as a forum for objective discussions of data implications and related policy issues by regularly bringing together representatives from academic, corporate, foundation, government, and professional societies to exchange data and information on topics of mutual interest.

Current and recent projects include:

- Career Outcomes of Engineers (funded by the National Science Foundation: Research on Gender in Science and Engineering)
- Status of Women in International Chemistry, Computer Science and Mathematics: What We Need to Know to Increase the Advancement of Women (funded by the National Science Foundation)
- Career Outcomes of Science Master's Degree Holders (with the American Association for the Advancement of Science and funded by the National Science Foundation)
- Data Tools for Institutional Transformation: Collaboration, Synthesis and Dissemination (funded by the National Science Foundation, ADVANCE: Partnerships for Adaptation, Implementation and Dissemination)
- Confronting the "New" American Dilemma: Under-Represented Minorities in Engineering: A Data-Based Look at Diversity (funded by National Action Council for Minorities in Engineering)
- Annual Review of Literature on Women in Engineering (funded by Society of Women Engineers)

Our website (<http://www.cpst.org>) provides access to data archives of labor force and education data produced via the STEM Workforce Data Project, funded by the Alfred P. Sloan Foundation. We also have an emerging set of resources for use in efforts to increase diversity of STEM fields. Our print publications provide comprehensive coverage of STEM workforce dynamics.

7. Institute for Social Research Panel Study of Income Dynamics

Presenter(s): Katherine McGonagle; P.O. Box 1248, 426 Thompson St., Room 3252 ISR, Ann Arbor, MI 48104-1248; phone: 734-936-1773; email: kmcgon@umich.edu; homepage: www.psidonline.org

The Panel Study of Income Dynamics (PSID) is the world's longest running nationally representative household panel survey. With data collected 1968-2009 on the same families and their descendents, the PSID is a cornerstone of the data infrastructure for empirically-based social science research. The long panel, genealogical blood-line, and broad content of the data represent a unique and powerful opportunity to study evolution and change within the same families over a considerable time span.

The PSID now contains more than 40 years of prospective life histories of families with respondents who have become parents, grandparents and now great-grandparents, as well as over 5,500 respondents who have died since the survey began. These data are being used to support increasingly complex models of outcomes for individuals over the life cycle, for relatives within the same generation of a given family (e.g. sibling models), and for individuals across multiple generations of the same family (e.g. parent-adult child models). Data on employment, income, wealth, health, housing, and food expenditures, transfer income, and marital and fertility behavior have been collected annually since 1968. Recent additions include questions on mental health, an expansion of expenditure questions, and a supplement on philanthropic giving. From 5,000 families in 1968, the study has grown to include nearly 9,000 families and more than 65,000 individuals as of 2009. In recent years, the value of the PSID has been further extended through matching PSID respondents to Census geocodes, permitting the addition of valuable neighborhood characteristics to individual files. PSID data can be used to study the full life course. With rich information collected over many waves on health, retirement, and pensions, and more than 5,000 individuals aged 50 and older, the data support the study of aging. All waves of PSID data and documentation are freely available to Internet users worldwide by accessing the website: <http://psidonline.isr.umich.edu/>. This newly upgraded PSID Data Center is a user-friendly interface that allows the easy creation of customized data files and codebooks in a variety of formats.

8. Minnesota Population Center University of Minnesota

Presenter(s): Trent Alexander, Catherine Fitch, Matt Sobek; 50 Willey Hall

225 19th Ave South, Minneapolis, MN 55455; phone: 612-626-3927; fax: 612-626-8375; email: jta@umn.edu, fitch@umn.edu, floo0017@umn.edu; homepage: www.ipums.org

The Minnesota Population Center has undertaken several projects to create and disseminate harmonized census data for research and classroom use. These include the Integrated Public Use Microdata Series database (IPUMS-USA, IPUMS-International, and IPUMS-CPS) and the National Historical Geographic Information System (NHGIS). IPUMS-USA and IPUMS-International create uniform codes and documentation across 150 years of US census data and 50 years of census microdata from twenty-five other countries around the world. IPUMS-CPS does the same for 45 years of US Current Population Survey data. All data and documentation are available to researchers free of charge at <http://ipums.org>. The NHGIS provides aggregate census data and GIS-compatible boundary files for the United States between 1790 and 20006, available free of charge at <http://www.nhgis.org>.

9. Department of Sociology Center for Demography of Health & Aging--UW Madison

Presenter(s): Robert M. Hauser, Taissa S. Hauser; 1180 Observatory Dr., Madison, WI 53706; phone: 608-262-2858; fax: 608-

The Wisconsin Longitudinal Study (WLS) is a long-term study of a random sample of 10,317 men and women who graduated from Wisconsin high schools in 1957. The WLS provides an opportunity to study the life course, intergenerational transfers and relationships, family functioning, physical and mental health and well-being, and morbidity and mortality from late adolescence through middle age. WLS data also cover social background, youthful aspirations, schooling, military service, labor market experiences, family characteristics and events, social participation, psychological characteristics, and retirement.

Survey data were collected from the original respondents or their parents in 1957, 1964, 1975, 1992, and 2004; from a selected sibling in 1977, 1994, and 2005; from the spouse of the original respondent in 2004; from the spouse of the selected sibling in 2006; and from widow(er)s of the graduates and siblings in 2006. Data are currently available from all collection rounds except the widows

10. General Social Survey National Opinion Research Center

Presenter(s): Tom W. Smith; 1155 East 60th, Chicago, IL 60637; phone: 773-256-6288; fax: 773-753-7886; email: smitht@norc.uchicago.edu; homepage: www.norc.org/GSS+Website

The General Social Survey (GSS) of the National Opinion Research Center, University of Chicago, monitors social change in the United States. Since 1972, the GSS has gathered data on contemporary American society in order to monitor and explain trends and constants in attitudes, behaviors, and attributes of the adult population. These high quality data are easily accessible to a broad-based user community, including researchers, teachers in colleges and universities, students at undergraduate and graduate levels, business and corporate planners, journalists, and public officials who need to understand the pulse of our country in their work. The 27 national probability samples include interviews of over 50,000 respondents. Of the nearly 5,500 items that have been asked, there are time trends for over 1,000 items.

The International Social Survey Program (ISSP) is the cross-between the General Social Survey (GSS) and its counterparts in other countries. Studies have been conducted annually since 1985 dealing with such topics as the role of government, social support and networks, social inequality, gender, family, work, the environment, national identity, and religion. Over 500 surveys with over 600,000 respondents have been conducted. Topics are repeated about every 10 years. This means that both over time and cross-national comparisons are possible. There are now 45 member countries participating in the ISSP. It is a valuable resource for researchers undertaking comparative analysis or studying attitudes, behaviors, and attributes of adult populations in other countries.

The New Immigrant Survey (NIS) is a multi-cohort prospective-retrospective panel survey of new legal immigrants to the United States based on probability samples of administrative records from the U.S. Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services. A survey pilot project (NIS-P) was carried out in 1996 to test sampling procedures, questionnaire design, and tracking procedures to inform the implementation of the full NIS.

The first full cohort (NIS-2003-1) was sampled during May through November of 2003, yielding data on 8,573 Adult Sample respondents, 4,336 spouses, and 1,072 children aged 8-12. The baseline survey was conducted from June 2003 to June 2004. The geographic sampling design takes advantage of the natural clustering of immigrants. It includes all top 85 Metropolitan Statistical Areas (MSAs) and all top 38 counties, plus a random sample of MSAs and counties.

The NIS is a new plan for nationally representative, longitudinal studies of immigrants and their children that promises to provide new kinds of data that will help answer many of the important questions about immigration and concomitantly shed light on basic aspects of human development. The main objective is to provide a public-use database on new legal immigrants to the United States and their children that will be useful for addressing scientific and policy questions about migration behavior and the impacts of migration.

The NIS content includes the following information: demographic, health and insurance, migration history, living conditions, transfers, employment history, income, assets, social networks, religion, housing environment, and child assessment tests. At the present, follow-up interviews (NIS-2003-2) are conducted.

12. Office of Population Research Princeton University

Founded in 1982, the Mexican Migration Project (MMP) has annually administered ethnosurveys to randomly sampled households in various communities in Mexico since 1987. In 1998, the Latin American Migration Project (LAMP) was born. For both projects, each community yields approximately 200 surveyed households in the home country, as well as 10 to 20 households of community members living in the U.S. Responses are converted to electronic format and compiled to form five unique data sets. PERS file contains socioeconomic information for each household member, including basic measures of domestic and international migration. MIG file contains detailed border-crossing, measures of migratory experience of family of origin, extended family and friends, and the social and economic characteristics of the last U.S. trip for each household head. HOUSE file contains measures of household composition and amenities, as well as data about businesses, land, property, vehicles, and livestock. LIFE and SPOUSE files are labor histories, and each record represents a person-year detailing labor force, family/household formation, and cumulative U.S. experience. In addition, we offer the community file with measures of infrastructure, social resources, public services, labor force participation, and education. Currently, the MMP contains 118 communities, while the LAMP includes multiple communities surveyed in Puerto Rico, Dominican Republic, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Peru, Paraguay, Haiti, and Guatemala. In December 2008, LAMP expanded to Colombia; datasets for Colombia are expected to be available in late 2009.

NIH, comprising 27 Institutes and Centers, is a major supporter of the social and behavioral sciences, providing an estimated $3 billion in fiscal year 2007. In addition to funding both large and small research projects, NIH also funds fellowships for graduate students, post-doctoral researchers, and senior fellows, career development grants for recent Ph.D.s and more established researchers, supplements to existing research projects to promote diversity in science, center grants, and special grants to support scientific research at educational institutions that have not been major recipients of NIH funds. The NIH Institutes listed above are responsible for more than two-thirds of the NIH funding for social and behavioral research. Substantive areas of interest are broad, and include research in the well-being of human beings across the life course; population studies/demography; the role of education, human capital, and socioeconomic status on health and well-being; physical and mental disability; substance abuse etiology, prevention, and treatment; HIV/AIDS; mental health; health disparities; nursing research; and other research on the role that behavioral and social factors play in health, health care, and well-being.

The U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), based in Atlanta, Georgia, is the nation's lead public health agency. Its mission is to prevent and control disease, injury, and disability and to prepare for emerging health threats. CDC seeks to accomplish its mission in partnership, both domestically and globally, by monitoring health, detecting and investigating health problems, conducting research to enhance prevention, developing and advocating sound public health policies, implementing prevention strategies, promoting healthy behaviors, fostering safe and healthful environments, and providing leadership and training. The agency maintains a full research and practice agenda that includes the prevention of infectious diseases, chronic diseases, injuries, workplace hazards, birth defects, and disabilities, in addition to protection from environmental hazards such as lead and other toxic substances. It also promotes healthy behaviors and lifestyle choices. CDC employs scientists from a variety of disciplines including those from the social and behavioral sciences. Each of these disciplines brings a unique perspective to the study and conduct of public health which contributes to CDC's mission overall. Information will be available regarding job opportunities, postgraduate training, the Epidemic Intelligence Service (EIS), and funding opportunities.

Integrated Health Interview Series (IHIS): Free Data and Documentation on Four Decades of U.S. Health Status, Health Care, and Health Behavior.

The Integrated Health Interview Series (IHIS) simplifies cross-temporal analysis of population health data collected in the U.S. National Health Interview Survey (NHIS), the main source of information on the health of the U.S. population. IHIS is a Web-based system that provides integrated data and documentation covering thousands of sociodemographic and health-related variables from the 1960s to the present. IHIS allows researchers to create tailor-made data extracts containing the variables and years relevant to their own projects. Extensive on-line documentation highlights comparability issues and specifies variable availability, codes and frequencies, and question wording. Funded by NICHD, IHIS helps researchers make consistent comparisons across 4 decades of dramatic changes in health status, health behavior, and healthcare. IHIS data on more than 4 million persons are available for free over the internet (at www.ihis.us) to researchers, educators, and the general public.

National Archives and Records Administration

Presenter(s): Lynn Goodsell ; National Archives at College Park, consistency can be created across the years. This file will be vital for analysts interested in understanding changes across time. As with the individual survey files, the harmonized file will be processed to ICPSR archival standards and preserved.

3. To create online data analysis files with an analytic interface. This interface will allow for automated data extraction and subsetting, as well as descriptive and inferential analysis. This third goal also encompasses the creation of enhanced Web-based documentation that permits users to navigate the harmonized file and evaluate variable comparability.

Thus, the overarching purpose of this project is to advance scientific understanding of family and fertility changes over roughly the past 50 years in the United States by providing the research and policy communities with a harmonized data file and accompanying analytic interface.

Presenter(s): Paula Baker; 921 Chatham Lane, Suite 100, Columbus, OH 43221-2418; phone: 614-442-7375; fax: 614-442-7329; email: baker.21@osu.edu; homepage: www.bls.gov/nls/nlsy79ch.htm

The Children of the NLSY79 data set profiles the development, achievement, and ability of the children born to mothers in the National Longitudinal Surveys of Youth/79 Cohort. Started in 1986 and repeated biennially, the Child surveys are sponsored by the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics with support from NICHD. The current public release provides Child data collected over a span of 20 years and maternal histories that date back to when the mothers were age 14-21. The ongoing Child surveys use mother report, direct assessment, and child self-report to gauge the children's health, abilities, problems, activities, attitudes, school progress, and home environment. Starting in 1994, children 15 and older are no longer assessed but interviewed as Young Adults on schooling, employment, training, family experiences, health, and attitudes. The Child/YA sample ranges in age from birth to mid thirties and contains significant numbers of black, Hispanic and economically disadvantaged white respondents. In 2006 (and in the current 2008 survey round), more than 7,500 children and young adults were interviewed. While considerable maternal information has been included on the Child-YA data file, the NLSY79 Child-Young Adult files can also be merged with any item from the complete 40-year longitudinal record of their NLSY79 mothers. The NLSY79 main Youth file contains histories of employment, education, income, training, work attitudes, aspirations, health, marriage, fertility, household composition, and residence. Information is also available from the mother's interviews about her childcare practices, substance use, illegal activities, aptitude, and selected social-psychological scales. The current public release, available at no cost at <http://www.nlsinfo.org/web-investigator/>, represents 11 rounds of NLSY79 Child survey data and the complete histories of their mothers. Data from the 12th Child survey are being prepared for public release in 2010. A searchable, annotated listing of NLS research can be accessed at: <http://www.nlsbibliography.org/>. Details on the NLSY79 Child and Young Adult surveys can be found online at: <http://www.bls.gov/nls/nlsy79ch.htm>.

The National Longitudinal Study of Adolescent Health (Add Health)

Carolina Population Center, University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill

The National Longitudinal Study of Adolescent Health (Add Health) is a longitudinal study of a nationally representative sample of 20,000 adolescents in grades 7-12 in the United States during the 1994-95 school year. The Add Health cohort has been followed into young adulthood with four in-home interviews, the most recent in 2008, when the sample was age 24-32. Add Health combines longitudinal survey data on respondents' social, economic, psychological and physical well-being with contextual data on the family, neighborhood, community, school, friendships, peer groups, and romantic relationships, providing unique opportunities to study how social environments and behaviors in adolescence are linked to health and achievement outcomes in young adulthood. At Wave IV, expanded collection of biological data, including anthropometric, cardiovascular, metabolic, immune function and genetic measures, will allow researchers to examine the social, behavioral, and biological linkages in health trajectories as the Add Health cohort ages through adulthood.

We will present information on the Add Health study design, sample sizes and data access, as well as preliminary data from Wave IV (2008). Through multiple data collection components, including in-school and in-home interviews, Add Health has collected survey data from adolescents, their fellow students, school administrators, parents, siblings, friends, and romantic partners. In addition, existing data bases with information about respondents' neighborhoods and communities have been merged with Add Health data, including variables on income and poverty, unemployment, availability and utilization of health services, crime, church membership, and social programs and policies. These data are available in two forms—a public-use data set and a restricted-use contractual data set. Wave IV data are currently scheduled for final release in Fall 2009.

Add Health has been funded since 1994 by a program project grant from the Eunice Kennedy Shriver National Institute of Child Health and Human Development, with co-funding from 21 other federal agencies. For more information, see the Add Health web site: <http://www.cpc.unc.edu/projects/addhealth>.

The National Archives and Records Administration (NARA) is the federal agency responsible for preservation of, and access to, the permanently valuable records of the federal government. The Electronic and Special Media Records Services Division has custody of the permanently valuable computerized records of federal agencies transferred into the National Archives for long-term preservation. The Division has over 200,000 computerized data files from over 100 federal agencies in all three branches of government. Topics reflected in the electronic records holdings at NARA include agricultural data, attitudinal data, demographic data, economic and financial statistics, education data, environmental data, health and social services data, international data, military data, and scientific and technological data

The Association of Religion Data Archives (ARDA) provides free access to the highest quality data on religion. The ARDA allows you to interactively explore American and international data using online features for generating national profiles, maps, church membership overviews, GIS mapping, QuickStats, QuickLists, denominational heritage trees, tables, charts, and other summary reports. Over 500 data files are available for online preview (including multiple years of the General Social Survey) and virtually all can be downloaded free of charge. The ARDA continues to add new features. Two of the most recent features are GIS U.S. Maps and a Learning Center. Partnering with Social Explorer, the ARDA now provides interactive mapping of demographic data by census tracts and religious adherence data by counties. The expanded Learning Center contains many new Learning Modules for classroom use as well as a Dictionary of Religious and Statistical Terms. Housed in the Social Science Research Institute at the Pennsylvania State University, the ARDA is funded by the Lilly Endowment, and the John Templeton Foundation

Sponsored by the Agency for Healthcare Research and Quality (AHRQ), the Medical Expenditure Panel Survey (MEPS) is a vital resource designed to continually provide policymakers, researchers, health care professionals, businesses and others with timely, comprehensive information about the United States population's health, health care utilization, and costs. The MEPS is a continuous on-going nationally representative survey initiated in 1996. MEPS collects data on the specific health care services that Americans use, how frequently they use them, the cost of those services and how they are paid, as well as data on the cost, scope, and breadth of private health insurance held by and available to the U.S. civilian non-institutionalized population. MEPS is unparalleled for the degree of detail in its data, as well as its ability to link health status and health care to the demographic, employment, economic, family and other characteristics of survey respondents. In addition, MEPS is the only national survey that provides a foundation for estimating the impact of changes in sources of payment, insurance coverage, and family status on different economic groups or special populations such as the poor, elderly, veterans, the uninsured, and racial and ethnic minorities. These data have been used to examine factors associated with access to health care, estimates of eligibility for federal programs, racial and ethnic disparities in health, and issues related to the quality and satisfaction with health care. The MEPS is useful for monitoring the effects of social policy on population health, healthcare access, utilization, and quality across time and policy relevant subgroups. All MEPS public use data files are available for down-loading free of charge from the MEPS website: www.meps.ahrq.gov.

A New Tool for Exploring the History of American Women's Fertility Outcomes and Behaviors: The Integrated Fertility Survey Series.

This poster will describe progress on a 5-year project funded by NICHD to harmonize approximately 50 years' worth of data on the fertility behavior of American women. The project is entitled the Integrated Fertility Survey Series.

The central purpose of the project is to produce a harmonized dataset of U.S. family and fertility surveys spanning the 1955-2002 period, including the 1955 and 1960 Growth of American Families (GAF); the 1965 and 1970 National Fertility Survey (NFS); and the 1973, 1976, 1982, 1988, 1995, and 2002 National Survey of Family Growth (Cycles 1-6 of the NSFG). This new Integrated Fertility Survey Series (IFSS) and its associated data products will facilitate analyses across time, yielding new insights into changes in fertility and the family.

The project has three goals that are related to producing integrated data products and serving a variety of users and purposes:

1. To prepare clean, standardized electronic data files and documentation for ten fertility surveys and to archive and document the files at a single source site using Inter-university Consortium for Political and Social Research (ICPSR) archival standards.
2. To produce a harmonized data file with metadata, including the subset of variables of scientific significance for which

Presenter(s): Marianne Janes, Karen Hamrick; 2 Massachusetts Avenue, NE, Suite 4675, Washington, DC 20212; phone: 202-691-5446; fax: 202-691-6426; email: Janes_m@bls.gov, khamrick@ers.usda.gov; homepage: www.bls.gov/tus; www.ers.usda.gov/Data/ATUS

The poster presented will provide data users with information on the American Time Use Survey (ATUS) and the ATUS Eating and Health Module. The ATUS provides nationally representative estimates of how, where, and with whom Americans age 15 and over spend their time, and is the only federal survey providing data on the full range of nonmarket activities, from childcare to volunteering. ATUS public use data files are used by researchers to study a broad range of issues; these data files include information collected from over 80,000 interviews conducted from 2003 to 2008. The ATUS Eating and Health Module, conducted from 2006 to 2008, provides information on time spent in eating and drinking activities, grocery shopping, and meal preparation, as well as identifying households that participated in the Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program, or SNAP (formerly the Food Stamp Program). ATUS and Eating and Health Module data files can be linked to data files from the Current Population Survey (CPS). This expands the context in which time-use data can be analyzed.

26. Human, Social, Cultural Behavioral Program, Code 30 Office of Naval Research

Presenter(s): Ivy Estabrooke; 875 N. Randolph Street, Room 1143E/Code 30, Arlington, VA 22203; phone: 703-588-2396; email: estabri@onr.navy.mil; homepage: www.onr.navy.mil

The Office of Naval Research (ONR), the funding agency for scientific research and technology development to meet the operational needs of the Navy and Marine Corps, has funding opportunities for sociologists and other social scientists through its Human, Social, Cultural and Behavioral Sciences and Modeling Program. The missions of the Navy and Marine Corps require their personnel to understand, interact, and collaborate with people from a wide range of cultures and societies. Improving Navy and Marine Corps personnel's understanding of the human terrain will enable them to work more effectively in other cultures and reducing instability and supporting security and development in areas of conflict or post-conflict.

ONR is currently funding a number of leading sociologists including applying affect control theory to Arabic speaking populations, computational modeling of strategic contexts, and several comparative survey efforts to collect data in multiple countries. In addition to these current efforts, we are seeking proposals that examine which social and cultural factors influence human behavior, how these vary cross culturally, how data related to these factors can be collected rapidly, and how the relationship between these factors can be modeled to provide insights into individual, group and community responses to events.

ONR solicits research proposals from principle investigators through Broad Agency Announcements (BAA). The HSCB program has an annual targeted BAA, typically released in the early spring, which identifies topic areas that are of particular interest. ONR also has a "Long Range BAA" that is always open allowing submission of proposals at anytime. The typical submission process has two phases. Principle investigators are invited to submit white papers, 4-6 page concept papers, that briefly lay-out the idea, experimental design, potential Naval relevance and a rough order of magnitude budget for the proposed work. These papers are reviewed and those that are promising are invited to submit full proposals. Full proposals provide a more in-depth description of the proposed work, underlying theory, and methodology that will be used to conduct the research.

For more information visit ONR's website www.onr.navy.mil or contact Dr. Ivy Estabrooke estabri@onr.navy.mil.

ASA Minority Fellowship Program Fellows

The following current and former MFP Fellows are participating in this year's Annual Meeting Program. ASA and the 2009 Program Committee are pleased to highlight professional activities of these fellows. The ASA Minority Fellowship Program (MFP), in operation since 1974, has been a significant factor in recruiting minorities into Sociology. Fellows continue to make important contributions to the growth of the discipline. The Association takes great satisfaction in acknowledging this form of professional activity.

ASA Honors Program Students

The following undergraduate sociology students were accepted into the ASA Honors Program for 2009. This program requires nearly a week of participation in professional events held concurrently with the Annual Meeting. Students receive full credit for participation only after completion of the program on August 11.

ASA and the 2009 Program Committee are pleased to highlight these students' introduction to the profession of sociology. The Honors Program has a 35-year history of involving sociology students in the ASA Annual Meeting. This year's students are wearing gold ribbons showing their Honors Program affiliation. Please welcome them to their national meeting!

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA PRESS

Increase your earning potential. Teach in business.

If you have an earned doctorate and demonstrated research potential, new opportunities are on the horizon. In response to business doctoral faculty shortages, Bridge to Business programs qualify non-business doctorates for high-paying tenure track positions at business schools. Not only will you gain a competitive advantage in the job market, you will work in a multidisciplinary, diverse research environment while developing future leaders. Post-doctoral Bridge to Business programs vary in length and delivery methods—visit online to compare and find one best for you. Information available at booth #117.

Among new assistant professors, those in business had the highest salary.

INVESTIGATOR AWARDS IN Health Policy Research

SEEKING SOCIOLOGISTS WITH POLICY- RELEVANT PROJECTS

Each year, the RWJF Investigator Awards in Health Policy Research program provides grants of up to $335,000 to investigators from a variety of disciplines and settings for broad, innovative studies of some of the most challenging health policy issues facing America. Past awardees include Linda Aiken, Peter Bearman, Charles Bosk, Phil Brown, Hannah Brückner, Dalton Conley, Rachel Grob, Pamela Jackson, Barbara Katz Rothman, Eric Klinenberg, Shoou-Yih Daniel Lee, Mary Clare Lennon, Bruce Link, David Mechanic, Alberto Palloni, Bernice Pescosolido, Jo Phelan, Alejandro Portes, Jill Quadagno, Robert Sampson, Mark Suchman, and David Williams, among others.

If you have an innovative project idea that holds promise for informing the development of sound health policies, we encourage you to apply. The next deadline for 4-page letter of intent applications will be in March 2010. Please visit www.investigatorawards.org in January for our 2010 Call for Applications.

The NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL OF THE NATIONAL ACADEMIES will offer

Ford Foundation Diversity Fellowships

for research-based study in the sciences and the humanities.
Fellowships are offered at the Predoctoral, Dissertation and Postdoctoral levels

These Fellowships are designed to increase the diversity of the nation's college and university faculties by increasing their ethnic and racial diversity, to maximize the educational benefits of diversity, and to increase the number of professors who can and will use diversity as a resource for enriching the education of all students.

Access to online applications, deadlines and detailed information will be available in early September at: national-academies.org/fellowships

Questions should be directed to the NRC Fellowships

Office at: Phone: 202-334-2872 or E-mail: infofell@nas.edu

American Journal of Sociology

Editor: Andrew Abbott

A Leading Voice in the Social Sciences

Established in 1895 as the first U.S. scholarly journal in its field, the American Journal of Sociology remains a leading voice for analysis and research in the social sciences. The journal presents pathbreaking work from all areas of sociology, with an emphasis on theory building and innovative methods. AJS strives to speak to the general sociological reader and is open to sociologically informed contributions from anthropologists, statisticians, economists, educators, historians, and political scientists.

Questioning Collapse

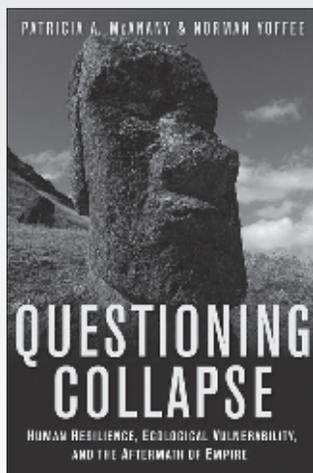

Human Resilience, Ecological Vulnerability, and the Aftermath of Empire

EDITED BY

Patricia A. McAnany, University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill

Norman Yoffee, University of Michigan

www.cambridge.org/collapse

Paperback | 9780521733663
USD 29.99 | 29 line figures
62 tones | 22 maps | 400 pages

Questioning Collapse challenges those scholars and popular writers who advance the thesis that societies - past and present - collapse because of behavior that destroyed their environments or because of overpopulation. In a series of highly accessible and closely argued essays, a team of internationally recognized scholars brings history and context to bear in their radically different analyses of iconic events.

FEATURES

- All-star team of contributors brings many years of scholarship to the text
- Broad geographical and temporal coverage, yet deeply contextualized analyses; transdisciplinary in approach
- Jargon-free and geared toward an undergraduate audience
- Emphasizes resiliency of human society and includes indigenous voices in the telling of history

1. Why we question collapse and study human resilience, ecological vulnerability, and the aftermath of empire Patricia A. McAnany and Norman Yoffee; Part I. Human Resilience and Ecological Vulnerability: 2. Ecological catastrophe, collapse, and the myth of "ecocide" on Rapa Nui (Easter Island) Terry L. Hunt and Carl P. Lipo; 3. Did the medieval Norse society in Greenland really fail? Joel Berglund; 4. Calamities without collapse: environment, economy, and society in China, ca. 1800–1949 Kenneth Pomeranz; Part II. Surviving Collapse: Studies of Societal Regeneration: 5. Marketing conquest and the vanishing Indian: an indigenous response to Jared Diamond's archaeology of the American southwest Michael Wilcox; 6. Bellicose rulers and climatological peril? Retrofitting 21st century woes on 8th century Maya society Patricia A. McAnany and Tomas Gallareta Negrón; 7. Collapse in ancient Mesopotamia: what happened, what didn't Norman Yoffee; Part III. Societies in the Aftermath of Empire: 8. Advanced Andeans and backward Europeans: structure and agency in the collapse of the Inca empire David Cahill; 9. Rwandan genocide: towards an explanation in which history and culture matter Christopher C. Taylor; 10. "Failed" states, societal "collapse", and ecological "disaster": a Haitian lesson on grand theory Drexel G. Woodson; 11. The power of the past: environment, Aborigines, archaeology, and a sustainable Australian society Tim Murray; 12. Excusing the haves and blaming the have-nots in the telling of history Frederick Errington and Deborah Gewertz; Part IV. Reflections on Sustainability: 13. Sustainable survival J. R. McNeill.

THE POLITICS OF CLIMATE CHANGE

Anthony Giddens, Member, House of Lords; former Director, London School of Economics & Political Science.

A major intervention into the debate on climate change, by one of the world's leading social thinkers

"A landmark study in the struggle to contain climate change, the greatest challenge of our era. I urge everyone to read it." – Bill Clinton, 42nd President of the United States

ISBN 978-0-7456-4693-0 | paper | 256 pages | $19.95

YOUTUBE

Jean Burgess and Joshua Green, Queensland University of Technology and MIT

A timely account of this hugely popular site of online participatory media

This book critically examines the public debate about YouTube, one of the most well-known of the participatory online media. Rich with concrete examples and featuring specially commissioned chapters by Henry Jenkins and John Hartley.

Second Edition

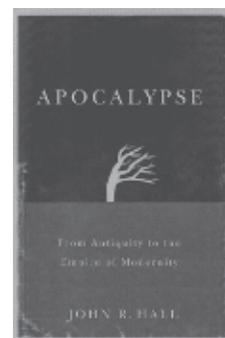

John R. Hall, University of California, Davis

A far-reaching study of how the phenomenon of "the end of times" has been understood and used throughout history

"A necessary book...theoretically sophisticated and historically erudite." – Jeffrey C. Alexander, Yale University

"Mind-bending... Hall shows us that there is an apocalyptic strand to modernity and history that will affect our own way of thinking about the global future." – Mark Juergensmeyer, University of California, Santa Barbara

MAX WEBER

A Biography

Nominated for American Sociological Association's (CITASA) Book Award!

"The book's quantitative approach to the study of support networks will please readers looking for a statistical overview of the nature of these interactions and those interested in clear and straightforward coding systems for this context ... All in all, the author succeeds in her broad goal of extending the study of social support into an online context."

— Journal of Language and Social Psychology

"A valuable resource for scholars, support program developers, and students attempting to understand advanced computing and communication constructs and those engaged in the provision of online support services."

WHAT AUTHORS SAY

"Cambria Press was a pleasure to work with on my book. They were very patient and understanding about how other commitments affected the turnaround time on my work for them. At the same time, I never waited very long to get work back from them and was very pleased with the time it took to get my book published. The people who work there treated me very well and made me feel like part of the Cambria family. Overall, it was a very positive experience."

— Dr. Antonina Bambina, Online Social Support

"From the submission of my manuscript to the publication of my book, I was extremely pleased with the entire Cambria staff—their professionalism, courtesy, sensitivity, friendliness, prompt response to all my questions, and, especially, their concern for me and my work. I would highly recommend Cambria Press to other academics."

— Dr. Miriam DeCosta-Willis, Notable Black Memphians

"The staff of Cambria Press have been very competent, courteous, innovative, quick, reliable, and more than a little daring."

— Dr. T. P. Schwartz-Barcott, After the Disaster
